

Marine Le Pen had an audience with President Putin in Moscow in March

But Mr Putin told Monday's news conference: "This doesn't mean that we somehow tried to influence the election at all... that would have been impossible as well."

He also said there was "nothing to discuss" when asked by journalists about allegations Russia has tried to meddle in foreign elections.

Before becoming president this month, Mr Macron accused Russia of pursuing "a hybrid strategy combining military intimidation and an information war".

On Monday he accused pro-Kremlin news outlets Russia Today and Sputnik of being "organs of influence and propaganda" against him.

What else did they talk about?

President Macron said they discussed the alleged persecution of gay men in the Russian republic of Chechnya, and President Putin had promised "measures aimed at establishing the whole truth about the activities of local authorities".

He said France would remain "vigilant" on the issue.

Image copyright Reuters
Image caption Marine Le Pen had an audience with President Putin in Moscow in March

But Mr Putin told Monday's news conference: "This doesn't mean that we somehow tried to influence the election at all... that would have been impossible as well."

He also said there was "nothing to discuss" when asked by journalists about allegations Russia has tried to meddle in foreign elections.

Before becoming president this month, Mr Macron accused Russia of pursuing "a hybrid strategy combining military intimidation and an information war".

On Monday he accused pro-Kremlin news outlets Russia Today and Sputnik of being "organs of influence and propaganda" against him.

What else did they talk about?

President Macron said they discussed the alleged persecution of gay men in the Russian republic of Chechnya, and President Putin had promised "measures aimed at establishing the whole truth about the activities of local authorities".

He said France would remain "vigilant" on the issue.

