

Neither condition necessarily applies in economics, but nonlinear analysis was nonetheless almost entirely absent until the 1940s, when Kaldor made the prescient observation that linear analysis could not explain the trade cycle