

As a genealogist, I use lots of material done by amateur writers who are (or were) writing only for themselves, their families and their close communities. Frequently this material is copyrighted and donated to a library but not formally published. Addresses of authors are frequently unavailable or wrong. I believe that it is (or was) the author's intent that other genealogists and family members should be allowed to read and copy their work. It would be a shame if this privilege were suspended and contrary to authorial intent.

Jane Drake Brody
Louisiana State University