

Wildlife

The Upper Green River Valley is a unique environment that provides critical habitat for a number of big-game, small mammal and bird species. The sage grouse, which depends upon these highlands for breeding ground, utilizes breeding sites called 'leks'.

This region also contains one of the longest big-game migration routes in North America. Each year thousands of pronghorn antelope use this 6,000-year-old route as they travel from summer ground in the Greater Yellowstone region to winter ranges in the Upper Green River Valley and Rock Springs area. In total, nearly 100,000 pronghorn, deer, moose, and elk spend the winter here.

The Upper Green River Valley is prime habitat for Sage Grouse.
