IRS' Abatement of Assessments in Fiscal Years 1995-98

General Government Division

June 4, 1999

The Honorable Bill Archer
Chairman
The Honorable William V. Roth, Jr.
Vice Chairman
Joint Committee on Taxation

Each year, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) abates tens of billions of dollars in tax, penalty, and interest assessments.¹ That is, IRS reduces these assessments on taxpayers' accounts. Abatements are important because they can correct tax, penalty, and interest amounts that have been overassessed due to errors by IRS or taxpayers. For some types of abatements, however, the assessments are correct, but IRS abates them for various other reasons. For example, penalties are abated for taxpayers who can prove they had reasonably relied on written advice from IRS.

Because IRS has not developed comprehensive information on the number and amount of various types of past abatements, you asked us to provide such information, which might help the Committee fulfill a requirement in the IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 that it report on the administration of penalty and interest assessments by July 22, 1999. On the basis of your February 2, 1999, request, our objectives were to determine for individual and business tax returns (1) the number and amount of various types of tax, penalty, and interest abatements made during fiscal years 1995 through 1998 and (2) selected characteristics of the abatements, such as the tax years of abated assessments, taxpayers' use of paid tax preparers, and IRS' actions—such as audit or collection actions—before abating assessments.²

Results

Our analysis of IRS records on individual and business abatements in fiscal years 1995 through 1998 showed that the number and amount of abatements of tax, penalty, and interest assessments stayed fairly constant. Each year, IRS abated, on average, about 10 million assessments worth about $30 billion. (See tables in app. I; unless noted otherwise, ¹Taxpayers essentially assess themselves when they voluntarily report the amount of taxes owed on a tax return. IRS may assess additional taxes owed, as well as penalty and interest amounts, as a result of an enforcement program, such as auditing tax returns that appear to have misreported income, deductions, credits, exemptions, or other tax issues.

²As also requested in this letter, we are developing a separate report on IRS' basic abatement processes and any IRS efforts to improve these processes.

tables in the appendixes include abatements of tax, penalty, and interest assessments.)

To illustrate the types of analysis we did on individual and business abatements, for just the individual taxpayers, IRS abated 7.1 million assessments in fiscal year 1998³—2.5 million tax, 2.4 million penalty, and 2.2 million interest assessments. These abatements totaled about $7.8 billion—$5.5 billion in tax, $1.5 billion in penalty, and $0.8 billion in interest assessments.⁴ For the 2.4 million penalty abatements, 1.4 million were failure-to-pay penalties. Of the $1.5 billion in penalty abatements, $676 million were miscellaneous civil tax penalties.⁵

A variety of characteristics were associated with the abatements for individuals and businesses during fiscal years 1995-98. For example, the 7.1 million individual abatements in fiscal year 1998 were associated with the following characteristics:

- About 80 percent of the 7.1 million abatements (as well as the abated amounts) involved individuals who predominantly reported nonbusiness income, such as wages, rather than business income from self-employment.
- The 7.1 million abatements were associated with 4.3 million filed returns. Of these returns, 52 percent were joint returns and 54 percent used a paid preparer.
- Of the 7.1 million abatements, about 19 percent were associated with a tax return with an additional assessment after the one originally reported and about 78 percent were associated with a previous collection action.
- Of the 7.1 million abatements, 64 percent involved assessments for tax years after 1995, while 9 percent involved assessments for tax years before 1992.

Appendixes II and III provide detailed information for all 4 years on the number and amount of abatements for individual and business returns. Appendixes IV and V provide information about the characteristics of abatements for individual and business returns during fiscal years 1995

³It is important to recognize that an individual taxpayer could receive multiple abatements in a fiscal year, such as when an abated tax assessment also leads to abated penalty and interest assessments.

⁴IRS data extracts that we used did not allow us to link specific abatements to related assessments. As a result, we could not determine how much of the various types of assessments had been abated.

⁵These miscellaneous penalties include the trust fund penalty that applies when a business does not properly deposit its employment taxes. IRS is to assess the penalty against all responsible individuals associated with that business until these taxes are deposited.

through 1998. Appendixes VI and VII provide information about abatements on tax returns associated with one of two IRS activities—creating substitute returns for nonfilers and making additional assessments.

Background

Section 6404 of the Internal Revenue Code (IRC) authorizes IRS to abate an assessment under certain conditions. For example, IRS can abate an erroneous assessment, which can be caused by either IRS or the taxpayer. IRS does not have automated data available on the root causes of these errors. Some examples of errors follow.

- A taxpayer made an error on the original return, such as underreporting a deduction, and filed an amended return. If IRS verified the correctness of the amended return, it would abate the overassessed portion of the original tax reported.
- In an audit, IRS did not find adequate support for certain deductions and ultimately assessed additional taxes. Afterward, the taxpayer challenged this assessment by providing documentation to support the deductions.⁶ If IRS found the documentation valid, IRS would abate the overassessment.
- IRS might assess taxes on the basis of evidence that IRS had received about income paid to an individual who had not filed an income tax return. IRS would then notify the taxpayer of the assessment. If the taxpayer then filed a return with a lower tax liability and IRS confirmed this new liability, IRS would abate any overassessment.

In addition, IRS can abate unnecessary assessments of the correct amount in special situations. That is, IRS has made the assessment multiple times, knowing that any unnecessary assessments will eventually be abated. In these situations, IRS knows that a tax is owed from among multiple taxpayers. IRS would assess each of these taxpayers and then abate any unnecessary assessments after the tax is paid.

IRS also abates correct assessments for other reasons. For example, IRS abates certain penalties when a taxpayer provides a reasonable cause (such as a nonfinancial hardship, or incorrect IRS written advice) for not meeting a tax responsibility, such as paying an assessment. Or, a taxpayer ⁶Before IRS assesses additional taxes that an audit recommends, a taxpayer can dispute the recommended assessment through IRS' Office of Appeals. Also, upon receiving notice of a proposed assessment, a taxpayer has 90 days (150 days if outside the United States) to file a petition with the Tax Court for a redetermination of the proposed adjustment. Some taxpayers, for whatever reasons, bypass these options, which result in the recommended taxes being assessed, along with any related penalty and interest amounts.

can claim a deduction by carrying back net operating losses incurred in other tax years to reduce the liability for a previous tax year. And IRS may abate an assessment for unpaid taxes that involved the correct amount but was made after the time period allowed for assessing additional tax liabilities.

Regardless of the reason, when IRS abates a tax or penalty assessment, its computers generally abate any other associated penalty and interest assessments. IRS records data on abatements (as well as other tax activity, such as assessments and payments) in a taxpayer's account on IRS' masterfile. IRS maintains both an individual and a business masterfile.

Scope and Methodology

For both objectives, we requested data extracts from IRS' individual and business masterfiles to identify the abatements received during fiscal years 1995 through 1998 by individuals and businesses. These IRS data identified the number and dollar amounts for each type of tax, penalty, or interest abatement. The data included specific characteristics about each abatement, such as the type and year of the tax return, the income level and filing status of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's use of a paid preparer, and the IRS actions taken on the tax return that had an assessment abated, such as an audit or collection action.

The masterfile data extracts we received had 43 million abatement transactions that totaled $120 billion for the 4 fiscal years. Using the results of our various analyses, we created a series of tables on the number and amount of abatements as well as the characteristics associated with the abatements. The tables for these 4 fiscal years are provided in appendixes I through VII to this report.⁷

We did not attempt to verify the reliability of the masterfile data. However, we talked to IRS National Office officials on data abnormalities we found. To the extent that these abnormalities affected our analyses, we identified them in footnotes to the tables in this report. Further, IRS' data extracts did not allow us to link specific abatements to the related assessments in various years. As a result, we could not determine how much of the various types of assessments had been abated, particularly by year. Nor ⁷We also did limited analyses on transactions that we did not include in our abatement totals but that reduced the taxes owed. In general, these transactions forgave or eliminated an unpaid tax amount even though the assessment was correct. These transactions included eliminating a tax debt because the statutory period (generally 10 years) for collecting the debt had expired or because the taxpayer had gone through bankruptcy. Our analyses of these "other" transactions are separate from our abatement analyses and are reported in app. VIII.

could we analyze why an assessment was abated or whether the abatement was valid.

We performed our audit at IRS headquarters in Washington, D.C., and IRS' Kansas City Service Center. Our work was done between January and May 1999 in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.

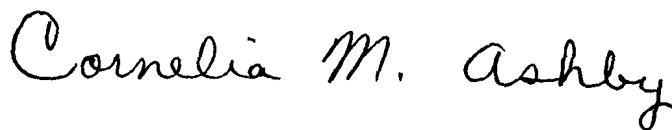

Agency Comments

We requested comments on a draft of this report from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. On May 21, 1999, we received written comments from IRS' Chief Operations Officer. (See app. IX.)

IRS' letter indicated an agreement with our draft report. The letter said that the statistical tables in our report were consistent with IRS' abatement data. Further, the letter commented that the report provides good information on aspects of abatements.

Abatements Associated With Tax, Penalty, and Interest Assessments on Substitute for Returns

The Internal Revenue Service uses third-party information to prepare a substitute for return for nonfilers. IRS prepares the return without knowledge of filing status, exemptions, and other deductions. When the notice of deficiency is received, some taxpayers file a corrected return. IRS will then abate any overassessed portion of tax, penalty, and interest.

In this appendix, we have excluded tables on return characteristics because the data are unreliable, such as filing status and exemptions, or do not apply, such as paid preparer.

Abatements of Tax, Penalty, and Interest Assessments Associated With Tax on Original Return

Original tax assessments are from returns filed by taxpayers. All abatements of tax, penalty, and interest shown in this appendix are associated with the tax assessment on the original return because IRS had not assessed additional taxes before these abatements. We have excluded substitute for return data fields from this set of tables as these types of returns do not show an original tax assessment amount and would not result in an abatement without an intervening tax assessment.

Ms. Cornelia M. Ashby
Associate Director, Tax Policy and Administration Issues
United States General Accounting Office
Washington, D.C. 20548

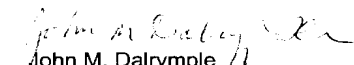

Dear Ms. Ashby:

Thank you for the opportunity to review and comment on your recent draft report entitled "Tax Administration: IRS' Abatement of Assessments in Fiscal Years 1995-98." We are pleased that you sought our comments as the study progressed and especially during its final stages. The result of this communication is a report that provides good information on certain aspects of the IRS' administration of abatements. For example, the report appropriately describes abatement scenarios which are indicative of the wide range of situations where abatements would be warranted. Further, the statistical tables you have included in the appendices are consistent with our abatement data. We are also pleased that additional footnotes will be added to clarify the data presented. We believe this information should be quite helpful to the Joint Committee on Taxation as they conduct the study mandated by the IRS' Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 on the IRS' administration and implementation of the interest and penalty provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

We take quite seriously the mandates of the IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998. We will continue to provide whatever support is required to both the General Accounting Office and the Joint Committee as we all work to implement the requirements of the Act. We believe all of our efforts will help build a tax administration worthy of America's taxpayers.

If you have any questions or need additional information, please call me at (202) 622-6860 or a member of your staff may call Tom Wilson, Assistant Commissioner (Examination), at (202) 622-4400.

Sincerely,

John M. Dalrymple
