A Saturday editorial on the 2002 Klamath Basin salmon kill misidentified the Interior Department agency responsible for managing water in the region. It is the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation.

The Oregonian asserted in a June 24 editorial that the Bonneville Power Administration had kept secret an emergency decision April 3 to spill more water over dams when it ran short of electricity, potentially imperiling protected salmon. While the BPA did not contact a federal judge overseeing salmon recovery, it did inform federal fisheries agencies and a technical advisory team that includes fisheries interests from the four Northwest states.

Sen. Joseph McCarthy had no involvement with the House Committee on Un-American Activities during the 1950s. A commentary article on Monday's Editorial page was incorrect in that regard. McCarthy's investigations were separate from the House committee.

A story in Tuesday's Living section misstated the location of George Washington's 1778 headquarters. They were in New Brunswick, N.J.

A fleeing robbery suspect struck and injured people in another car, not pedestrians, as he drove away from a bank in Clackamas. A news brief in Tuesday's Metro section was unclear on that point.

The Easy Pickled Beet recipe published in Tuesday's FOODday does not contain enough vinegar to allow the beets to be canned and stored unrefrigerated. The recipe can be made safely as is, but put the unprocessed pickles in the refrigerator for up to two months. Do not process them in the water bath.
