America Goes Green for St. Patrick's Day

A holiday imported by Irish immigrants celebrated across the country

St. Patrick's Day might be one of the world's most celebrated holidays, with city-sponsored festivities held in Japan, Australia, Canada, Malaysia, Great Britain and the United States as well as the saint's native Ireland. That geography reflects the broad dispersion of Irish, through choice or necessity, in a 300-year, globe-spanning migration. But perhaps in no other adopted nation is the Irish presence felt as keenly as in the United States, where an ethnic holiday has expanded to embrace all Americans.

In virtually every U.S. elementary school, public or private, classrooms are decorated with green; a failure to wear green to school on St. Patrick's Day might be punished with a playful pinch. Stationery stores sell St. Patrick's Day greeting cards, bakeries offer shamrock-shaped cookies sprinkled with green sugar, and local pubs serve green beer.

CELEBRATED FROM COLONIAL TIMES ONWARD

March 17 is the feast day of Ireland's patron saint, the cleric Patrick (386-461), in the Catholic liturgical calendar and a legal holiday in the Republic of Ireland, in the Ulster province of Northern Ireland in the United Kingdom and in two Canadian provinces. But it is celebrated informally worldwide by people of every ethnic background.

The first recorded celebration of St. Patrick's Day in the American Colonies was in Boston in 1737, and the first St. Patrick's Day celebration in New York City was held at the Crown and Thistle Tayern in 1756.

National Women's History Month's roots go back to March 8, 1857, when women from New York City factories staged a protest over working conditions. International Women's Day was first observed in 1909, but it wasn't until 1981 that Congress established National Women's History Week during the second week of March. In 1987,

National

Congress expanded the week to a month. Every year since, Congress has passed a resolution for Women's History Month, and the president has issued a proclamation.

U.S. Census Bureau Fact Sheet

152 million
