

CRS Report for Congress

Regulation of Broadcast Indecency: Background and Legal Analysis

Updated January 23, 2008

Henry Cohen
Legislative Attorney
American Law Division

Kathleen Ann Ruane
Legislative Attorney
American Law Division

Prepared for Members and Committees of Congress

Regulation of Broadcast Indecency: Background and Legal Analysis

Summary

Two prominent television events placed increased attention on the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) and the broadcast indecency statute that it enforces. The airing of an expletive by Bono during the 2003 Golden Globe Awards, as well as the “wardrobe malfunction” that occurred during the 2004 Super Bowl half-time show, gave broadcast indecency prominence in the 109th and 110th Congresses, and resulted in the enactment of P.L.109-235 (2006), which increased the penalties for broadcast indecency by tenfold.

Federal law makes it a crime to utter “any obscene, indecent, or profane language by means of radio communication” (18 U.S.C. § 1464). Violators of this statute are subject to fines and imprisonment of up to two years, and the FCC may enforce this provision by forfeiture or revocation of a broadcaster’s license. The FCC has found that, for material to be “indecent,” it “must describe or depict sexual or excretory organs or activities,” and “must be patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium.” The federal government’s authority to regulate material that is “indecent” but not obscene was upheld by the Supreme Court in Federal Communications Commission v. Pacifica Foundation, which found that prohibiting such material during certain times of the day does not violate the First Amendment.

In 1992, Congress enacted P.L. 102-356 (47 U.S.C. § 303 note), section 16(a) of which, as interpreted by the courts, requires the FCC to prohibit “indecent” material on broadcast radio and broadcast television from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. Under P.L. 109-235, “indecent” broadcasts are now subject to a fine of up to “$325,000 for each violation or each day of continuing violation, except that the amount assessed for any continuing violation shall not exceed a total of $3,000,000 for any single act or failure to act.” Fines may be levied against broadcast stations, but not against broadcast networks. The FCC appears to have the statutory authority to fine performers as well (up to $32,500 per incident), but has taken the position that “[c]ompliance with federal broadcast decency restrictions is the responsibility of the station that chooses to air the programming, not the performers.”

The federal restriction on “indecent” material applies only to broadcast media, and this stems from the fact that there are a limited number of broadcast frequencies available and that the Supreme Court, therefore, allows the government to regulate broadcast media more than other media. This report discusses the legal evolution of the FCC’s indecency regulations, and provides an overview of how the current regulations have been applied. The final section of the report considers whether prohibiting the broadcast of “indecent” words regardless of context would violate the First Amendment. This question arises because the Supreme Court in Pacifica left open the question whether broadcasting an occasional expletive, as in the Bono case, would justify a sanction.

Contents

Introduction	1
Background	2
Evolution of the FCC’s Indecency Regulations	4
Current Regulations	7
Explicitness or Graphic Nature of Material	8
Dwelling or Repetition of Potentially Offensive Material	9
Pandering or Titillating Nature of Material	10
Golden Globe Awards Decision	10
Super Bowl Halftime Show Decision	12
Other Recent Enforcement Actions	14
Infinity Broadcasting	14
Clear Channel Broadcasting	15
Fox Television Stations, Inc. v. FCC	16
Congressional Response	18
109 th Congress	18
110 th Congress	19
Would Prohibiting the Broadcast of “Indecent” Words Regardless of Context Violate the First Amendment?	20
Broadcast Media	24
Strict Scrutiny	27
Second Circuit’s dicta in Fox Television Stations, Inc. v. FCC	31

Regulation of Broadcast Indecency: Background and Legal Analysis

Introduction

Two prominent television events placed increased attention on the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) and the broadcast indecency statute that it enforces.¹ The airing of an expletive by Bono during the 2003 Golden Globe Awards, as well as the “wardrobe malfunction” that occurred during the 2004 Super Bowl half-time show, gave broadcast indecency prominence in the 109th and 110th Congresses, and resulted in the enactment of P.L.109-235 (2006), which increased the penalties for broadcast indecency by tenfold.

Federal law makes it a crime to utter “any obscene, indecent, or profane language by means of radio communication” (18 U.S.C. § 1464). Violators of this statute are subject to fines and imprisonment of up to two years, and the FCC may enforce this provision by forfeiture or revocation of a broadcaster’s license. The FCC has found that, for material to be “indecent,” it “must describe or depict sexual or excretory organs or activities,” and “must be patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium.” The federal government’s authority to regulate material that is “indecent” but not obscene was upheld by the Supreme Court in Federal Communications Commission v. Pacifica Foundation, which found that prohibiting such material during certain times of the day does not violate the First Amendment.

In 1992, Congress enacted P.L. 102-356 (47 U.S.C. § 303 note), section 16(a) of which, as interpreted by the courts, requires the FCC to prohibit “indecent” material on broadcast radio and broadcast television from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. Under P.L. 109-235, “indecent” broadcasts are now subject to a fine of up to “$325,000 for each violation or each day of continuing violation, except that the amount assessed for any continuing violation shall not exceed a total of $3,000,000 for any single act or failure to act.” Fines may be levied against broadcast stations, but not against broadcast networks. The FCC appears to have the statutory authority to fine performers as well (up to $32,500 per incident), but has taken the position that

¹ The FCC’s indecency regulations only apply to broadcast radio and television, and not to satellite radio or cable television. The distinction between broadcast and cable television arises in part from the fact that the rationale for regulation of broadcast media — the dual problems of spectrum scarcity and signal interference — do not apply in the context of cable. As a result, regulation of cable television is entitled to heightened First Amendment scrutiny. See Turner Broadcasting v. Federal Communications Commission, 512 U.S. 622 (1994). Cable television is also distinguished from broadcast television by the fact that cable involves a voluntary act whereby a subscriber affirmatively chooses to bring the material into his or home. See Cruz v. Ferre, 755 F.2d 1415 (11th Cir. 1985).

“[c]ompliance with federal broadcast decency restrictions is the responsibility of the station that chooses to air the programming, not the performers.”

The federal restriction on “indecent” material applies only to broadcast media, and this stems from the fact that there are a limited number of broadcast frequencies available and that the Supreme Court, therefore, allows the government to regulate broadcast media more than other media. It appears likely that a court would find that to apply the FCC’s indecency restriction to cable or satellite media would violate the First Amendment.²

This report discusses the evolution of the FCC’s indecency regulations, provides an overview of how the current regulations have been applied, and examines indecency legislation that was introduced in the 109th and 110th Congress. (The bill that increased penalties is the only such legislation that was enacted.) The final section of this report considers whether prohibiting the broadcast of “indecent” words regardless of context would violate the First Amendment. This issue arises because the Supreme Court in Pacifica left open the question of whether broadcasting an occasional expletive, as in the Bono case, would justify a sanction.

Background

On January 19, 2003, broadcast television stations in various parts of the country aired the Golden Globe Awards. During the awards, the singer Bono, in response to winning an award, said, “this is really, really f[]ing brilliant.”³ In response to this utterance, the FCC received over 230 complaints alleging that the program was obscene or indecent, and requesting that the Commission impose sanctions on the licensees for the broadcast of the material in question.⁴

The Enforcement Bureau of the FCC issued a Memorandum Opinion and Order on October 3, 2003, denying the complaints and finding that the broadcast of the Golden Globe Awards including Bono’s utterance did not violate federal restrictions regarding the broadcast of obscene and indecent material.⁵ The Bureau dismissed the complaints primarily because the language in question did not describe or depict sexual or excretory activities or organs. The Bureau noted that while “the word ‘f[]ing’ may be crude and offensive,” it “did not describe sexual or excretory organs or activities. Rather, the performer used the word ‘f[]ing’ as an adjective or expletive to emphasize an exclamation.”⁶ The Bureau added that in similar circumstances it “found that offensive language used as an insult rather than as a

² See CRS Report RL33170, Constitutionality of Applying the FCC’s Indecency Restriction to Cable Television, by Henry Cohen.

³ See In the Matter of Complaints Against Various Broadcast Licensees Regarding Their Airing of the “Golden Globe Awards” Program, 18 F.C.C. Rcd. 19859 (2003).

⁴ Id. at 2.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id. at 3.

description of sexual or excretory activity or organs is not within the scope of the Commission's prohibition on indecent program content."⁷

The decision of the Enforcement Bureau was met with opposition from a number of organizations and Members of Congress, and an appeal was filed for review by the full Commission. FCC Chairman Michael Powell asked the full Commission to overturn the Enforcement Bureau's ruling.⁸

On March 18, 2004, the full Commission issued a Memorandum Opinion and Order granting the application for review and reversing the Enforcement Bureau's earlier opinion.⁹ The Commission found that the broadcasts of the Golden Globe Awards violated 18 U.S.C. 1464, but declined to impose a forfeiture on the broadcast licensees because the Order reverses Commission precedent regarding the broadcast of the "F-word." This decision is discussed in detail below.

On February 1, 2004, CBS aired Super Bowl XXXVIII, with a half-time show produced by the MTV network. The show included performers singing and dancing provocatively, and ended with the exposure of the breast of one female performer. The network received numerous complaints regarding the half-time performance and FCC Chairman Michael Powell initiated a formal investigation into the incident.¹⁰

On September 22, 2004, the FCC released a Notice of Apparent Liability for Forfeiture finding that the airing of the Super Bowl halftime show "apparently violate[d] the federal restrictions regarding the broadcast of indecent material."¹¹ The NAL imposes a forfeiture in the aggregate amount of $550,000 on Viacom Inc., the licensee or ultimate parent of the licensees with regard to whom the complaint was filed.¹² On March 15, 2006, the FCC issued a Forfeiture Order imposing a mandatory forfeiture in the amount of $550,000 on CBS for the airing of the 2004 Super Bowl halftime show. CBS appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, which heard oral arguments in the case on September 11, 2007. This case is discussed in greater detail below.

⁷ Id.

⁸ "FCC Chairman Seeks Reversal on Profanity," Washington Post, January 14, 2004, at E01.

⁹ In the Matter of Complaints Against Various Broadcast Licensees Regarding Their Airing of the "Golden Globe Awards" Program, File No. EB-03-IH-0110 (March 18, 2004).

¹⁰ [http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DOC-243435A1.pdf].

¹¹ Complaints Against Various Television Licensees Concerning Their February 1, 2004, Broadcast of the Super Bowl XXXVIII Halftime Show, File No. EB-04-IH-0011 (September 22, 2004) [<http://www.fcc.gov/eb/Orders/2004/FCC-04-209A1.html>].

¹² Id.

Evolution of the FCC’s Indecency Regulations

Title 18 of the United States Code makes it unlawful to utter “any obscene, indecent, or profane language by means of radio communication.”¹³ Violators of this provision are subject to fines or imprisonment of up to two years. The Federal Communications Commission has the authority to enforce this provision by forfeiture or revocation of license.¹⁴ The Commission’s authority to regulate material that is indecent, but not obscene, was upheld by the Supreme Court in Federal Communications Commission v. Pacifica Foundation.¹⁵ In Pacifica, the Supreme Court affirmed the Commission’s order regarding the airing of comedian George Carlin’s “Filthy Words” monologue.¹⁶ In that order, the Commission determined that the airing of the monologue, which contained certain words that “depicted sexual and excretory activities in a patently offensive manner,” at a time “when children were undoubtedly in the audience” was indecent and prohibited by 18 U.S.C. § 1464.¹⁷ Pursuant to the Court’s decision, whether any such material is “patently offensive” is determined by “contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium.”¹⁸ The Court noted that indecency is “largely a function of context — it cannot be judged in the abstract.”¹⁹

The Commission’s order in the Pacifica case relied partially on a spectrum scarcity argument; i.e., that there is a scarcity of spectrum space so the government must license the use of such space in the public interest, and partially on “principles analogous to those found in the law of nuisance.”²⁰ The Commission noted that public nuisance law generally aims to channel the offensive behavior rather than to prohibit it outright. For example, in the context of broadcast material, channeling would involve airing potentially offensive material at times when children are less likely to be in the audience. In 1987, the Commission rejected the spectrum scarcity argument as a sufficient basis for its regulation of broadcast indecency, but noted that it would continue to rely upon the validity of the public nuisance rationale, including channeling of potentially objectionable material.²¹ However, in its 1987 order, the ¹³ 18 U.S.C. § 1464. “Radio communication” includes broadcast television, as the term is defined as “the transmission by radio of writing, signs, signals, pictures, and sounds of all kinds.” 47 U.S.C. § 153(33).

¹⁴ 47 U.S.C. § 503(b).

¹⁵ 438 U.S. 726 (1978).

¹⁶ The United State Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit had reversed the Commission’s order. See 556 F.2d 9 (D.C. Cir. 1977). The Commission appealed that decision to the Supreme Court, which reversed the lower court’s decision.

¹⁷ 438 U.S. at 732.

¹⁸ Id.

¹⁹ Id. at 742.

²⁰ Id. at 731; see, In the Matter of a Citizen’s Complaint Against Pacifica Foundation Station WBAI (FM), New York, New York, 56 F.C.C.2d 94 (1975).

²¹ In the Matter of Pacifica Foundation, Inc. d/b/a Pacifica Radio Los Angeles, California, (continued...)

Commission also stated that channeling based on a specific time of day was no longer a sufficient means to ensure that children were not in the audience when indecent material aired and warned licensees that indecent material aired after 10 p.m. would be actionable.²² The Commission further clarified its earlier Pacifica order, noting that indecent language was not strictly limited to the seven words at issue in the original broadcast in question, and that repeated use of those words was not necessary to find that material in question was indecent.²³

The Commission's 1987 orders were challenged by parties alleging that the Commission had changed its indecency standard and that the new standard was unconstitutional. In Action for Children's Television v. Federal Communications Commission (ACT I), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upheld the standard used by the Commission to determine whether broadcast material was indecent, but it vacated the Commission's order with respect to the channeling of indecent material for redetermination "after a full and fair hearing of the times at which indecent material may be broadcast."²⁴

Following the court's decision in Action for Children's Television (ACT I), a rider to the Commerce, Justice, State FY89 Appropriations Act required the FCC to promulgate regulations to ban indecent broadcasts 24 hours a day.²⁵ The Commission followed the congressional mandate and promulgated regulations prohibiting all broadcasts of indecent material.²⁶ The new regulations were challenged, and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit vacated the Commission's order.²⁷ In so doing, the court noted that in ACT I it held that Commission "must identify some reasonable period of time during which indecent material may be broadcast," thus precluding a ban on such broadcasts at all times.²⁸

In 1992, Congress enacted the Public Telecommunications Act of 1992, which required the FCC to promulgate regulations to prohibit the broadcasting of indecent material from 6 a.m. to midnight, except for broadcasts by public radio and television

²¹ (...continued)

2 F.C.C. Rcd. 2698 (1987). Two other orders handed down the same day articulate the Commission's clarified indecency standard. See also In the Matter of the Regents of the University of California, 2 F.C.C. Rcd. 2703 (1987); In the Matter of Infinity Broadcasting Corporation of Pennsylvania, 2 F.C.C. Rcd. 2705 (1987).

²² The Commission noted Arbitron ratings indicating that a number of children remain in the local audience well after 10 p.m. See 2 F.C.C. Rcd. 1698, ¶ 16.

²³ 2 F.C.C. Rcd. 2698, ¶¶ 12 and 15.

²⁴ 852 F.2d 1332, 1344 (1988).

²⁵ P.L. 100-459, § 608.

²⁶ Enforcement of Prohibitions Against Broadcast Obscenity and Indecency, 4 F.C.C. Rcd. 457 (1988).

²⁷ Action for Children's Television v. Federal Communications Commission (ACT II), 932 F.2d 1504 (1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 913 (1992).

²⁸ Id. at 1509.

stations that go off the air at or before midnight, in which case such stations may broadcast indecent material beginning at 10 p.m.²⁹ The Commission promulgated regulations as mandated in the act.³⁰ The new regulations were challenged, and a three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit subsequently vacated the Commission's order implementing the act and held the underlying statute unconstitutional.³¹ In its order implementing the act, the FCC set forth three goals to justify the regulations: (1) ensuring that parents have an opportunity to supervise their children's listening and viewing of over-the-air broadcasts; (2) ensuring the well being of minors regardless of supervision; and (3) protecting the right of all members of the public to be free of indecent material in the privacy of their homes.³² The court rejected the third justification as "insufficient to support a restriction on the broadcasting of constitutionally protected indecent material," but accepted the first two as compelling interests.³³ Despite the finding of compelling interests in the first two, the court found that both Congress and the FCC had failed "to tailor their efforts to advance these interests in a sufficiently narrow way to meet constitutional standards."³⁴

Following the decision of the three-judge panel, the Commission requested a rehearing en banc.³⁵ The case was reheard on October 19, 1994, and, on June 30, 1995, the full court of appeals held the statute unconstitutional insofar as it prohibited the broadcast of indecent material between the hours of 10 p.m. and midnight on non-public stations.³⁶ In so doing, the court held that while the channeling of indecent broadcasts between midnight and 6 a.m. "would not unduly burden the First Amendment," the distinction drawn by Congress between public and non-public broadcasters "bears no apparent relationship to the compelling government interests that [the restrictions] are intended to serve."³⁷ The court remanded the regulations to the FCC with instructions to modify the regulations to permit the broadcast of indecent material on all stations between 10 p.m and 6 a.m.

²⁹ P.L. 102-356, § 16, 47 U.S.C. § 303 note.

³⁰ In the Matter of Enforcement of Prohibitions Against Broadcast Indecency in 18 U.S.C. 1464, 8 F.C.C. Rcd. 704 (1993).

³¹ Action for Children's Television v. Federal Communications Commission, 11 F.3d 170 (D.C. Cir. 1993).

³² 8 F.C.C. Rcd. at 705-706.

³³ 11 F.3d at 171.

³⁴ Id.

³⁵ Action for Children's Television v. Federal Communications Commission, 15 F.3d 186 (D.C. Cir. 1994).

³⁶ Action for Children's Television v. Federal Communications Commission (ACT III), 58 F.3d 654 (D.C. Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1043 (1996).

³⁷ 58 F.3d at 656.

Current Regulations

Following the decision in ACT III, the Commission modified its indecency regulations to prohibit indecent broadcasts from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.³⁸ The modified regulations became effective August 28, 1995.³⁹ These regulations have been enforced primarily with respect to radio broadcasts and thus have been applied more often to indecent language rather than to images.⁴⁰ Under these regulations, broadcasts deemed indecent were subject to a forfeiture of up to $32,500 per violation,⁴¹ with the FCC's considering each utterance of an indecent word as a separate violation, rather than viewing the entire program as a single violation.⁴²

Fines may be levied against broadcast stations, but not against broadcast networks. The FCC appears also to have the statutory authority to fine performers for uttering indecent words,⁴³ but it has taken the position that “[c]ompliance with federal broadcast decency restrictions is the responsibility of the station that chooses to air the programming, not the performers.”⁴⁴

³⁸ Enforcement of Prohibitions Against Broadcast Indecency in 18 U.S.C. § 1464, 10 F.C.C. Rcd. 10558 (1995); 47 C.F.R. 73.3999(b). Subsection (b) prohibits the broadcast of material which is obscene without any reference to time of day. Broadcast obscenity will not be discussed in this report. For more information on obscenity, see CRS Report 95-804, Obscenity and Indecency: Constitutional Principles and Federal Statutes, by Henry Cohen, and CRS Report 98-670, Obscenity, Child Pornography, and Indecency: Recent Developments and Pending Issues, by Henry Cohen.

³⁹ 60 FR 44439 (August 28, 1995).

⁴⁰ Enforcement actions based on televised broadcast indecency are rare. However, the Commission recently issued a Notice of Apparent Liability for the broadcast of indecent material during a televised morning news program. During the program, the show's hosts interviewed performers with a production entitled “Puppetry of the Penis,” who appeared wearing capes but were otherwise nude. A performer's penis was exposed during the broadcast. See In the Matter of Young Broadcasting of San Francisco, Inc., File No. EB-02-IH-0786 (January 27, 2004). See also In the Matter of Complaints Against Various Licensees Regarding Their Broadcast of the Fox Television Network Program “Married by America” on April 7, 2003, File No. EB-03-IH-0162 (October 12, 2004).

⁴¹ Under 47 U.S.C. § 503(b)(2)(A), the maximum fine per violation is $25,000. However, the maximum forfeiture amount was increased to $32,500 pursuant to the Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996, Public Law 104-134, which amended the Federal Civil Monetary Penalty Inflation Adjustment Act of 1990, Public Law 101-410. See 47 C.F.R. § 1.80.

⁴² Regulations set a maximum forfeiture of $325,000 for any single act or failure to act, which arguably limits the forfeiture for a single broadcast. See 47 C.F.R. § 1.80.

⁴³ 47 U.S.C. § 503(b)(1)(D) provides that the FCC may impose a forfeiture penalty upon any “person” who violates 18 U.S.C. § 1464, which makes it a crime to “utter” indecent language. In addition, 47 U.S.C. § 503(b)(6)(B) provides that the FCC may not impose a forfeiture penalty on a person who does not hold a broadcast station license if the violation occurred more than one year prior to the date of issuance of the required notice or notice of apparent liability. This suggests that the FCC may fine a performer if the violation occurred within one year of such date.

⁴⁴ Complaints Against Various Television Licensees Concerning Their February 1, 2004, (continued...)

On June 15, 2006, the President signed S. 193, 109th Congress, into law, and it became P.L. 109-235, the Broadcast Decency Enforcement Act of 2005. This law increased the penalty for indecent broadcasts tenfold, to $325,000 for each violation, with a maximum of $3 million “for any single act or failure to act.” This increased penalty may be levied against “a broadcast station licensee or permittee; or . . . an applicant for any broadcast license, permit, certificate, or other instrument or authorization issued by the Commission.” If the FCC were to change its policy and impose fines on performers, it could apparently do so only under the provision (which remains in effect) that authorizes forfeitures of up to $32,500 per violation.⁴⁵

To determine whether broadcast material is in fact indecent, the Commission must make two fundamental determinations: (1) that the material alleged to be indecent falls within the subject matter scope of the definition of indecency — the material in question must describe or depict sexual or excretory organs or activities; and (2) that the broadcast is patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium.⁴⁶ If the material in question does not fall within the subject matter scope of the indecency definition, or if the broadcast occurred during the “safe harbor” hours (between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.), the complaint is usually dismissed. However, if the Commission determines that the complaint meets the subject matter requirements and was aired outside the “safe harbor” hours, the broadcast in question is evaluated for patent offensiveness. The Commission notes that in determining whether material is patently offensive, the full context is very important, and that such determinations are highly fact-specific.

The Commission has identified three factors that have been significant in recent decisions in determining whether broadcast material is patently offensive:

- (1) the explicitness or graphic nature of the description or depiction of sexual or excretory organs or activities;
- (2) whether the material dwells on or repeats at length descriptions of sexual or excretory organs or activities;
- (3) whether the material appears to pander or is used to titillate, or whether the material appears to have been presented for its shock value.⁴⁷

A discussion of cases that address each of these factors follows.

Explicitness or Graphic Nature of Material. Generally, the more explicit or graphic the description or depiction, the greater the likelihood that the material will be deemed patently offensive and therefore indecent. For example, the Commission imposed a forfeiture on a university radio station for airing a rap song

⁴⁴ (...continued)

Broadcast of the Super Bowl XXXVIII Halftime Show, File No. EB-04-IH-0011 (September 22, 2004) [<http://www.fcc.gov/eb/Orders/2004/FCC-04-209A1.html>].

⁴⁵ See note 41, supra.

⁴⁶ See In the Matter of Industry Guidance on the Commission’s Case Law Interpreting 18 U.S.C. § 1464 and Enforcement Policies Regarding Broadcast Indecency, File No. EB-00-IH-0089 (April 6, 2001) [<http://www.fcc.gov/eb/Orders/2001/fcc01090.html>].

⁴⁷ Id.

that included a line depicting anal intercourse.⁴⁸ In that case, the Commission determined that the song described sexual activities in graphic terms that were patently offensive and therefore indecent. Since the song was broadcast in the mid-afternoon, there was a reasonable risk that children were in the audience, thus giving rise to the Commission's action.⁴⁹

Broadcasts need not be as graphic as the song in the above case to give rise to the imposition of an FCC forfeiture. Broadcasts consisting of double entendres or innuendos may also be deemed indecent if the "sexual or excretory import is unmistakable." The FCC issued a notice of apparent liability and imposed a forfeiture on several stations for airing a song that included the following lines: "I whipped out my Whopper and whispered, Hey, Sweettart, how'd you like to Crunch on my Big Hunk for a Million Dollar Bar? Well, she immediately went down on my Tootsie Roll and you know, it was like pure Almond Joy."⁵⁰ The Commission determined that the material was indecent even though it used candy bar names to substitute for sexual activities. In one notice concerning the broadcast of the song, the Commission stated that "[w]hile the passages arguably consist of double entendre and indirect references, the language used in each passage was understandable and clearly capable of specific sexual meaning and, because of the context, the sexual import was inescapable."⁵¹ The nature of the lyrics, coupled with the fact that the song aired between 6 a.m. and 10 a.m., gave rise to the imposition of a forfeiture.

Dwelling or Repetition of Potentially Offensive Material. Repetition of and persistent focus on a sexual or excretory activity could "exacerbate the potential offensiveness of broadcasts." For example, the FCC issued a notice of apparent liability and imposed a forfeiture on a radio station that broadcast an extensive discussion of flatulence and defecation by radio personality "Bubba, the Love Sponge."⁵² Though the broadcast did not contain any expletives, the Commission found that the material dwelt on excretory activities and therefore was patently offensive.

While repetition can increase the likelihood that references to sexual or excretory activities are deemed indecent, where such references have been made in passing or are fleeting in nature, the Commission has found that the reference was not indecent even when profanity has been used.⁵³ For example, the Commission

⁴⁸ Notice of Apparent Liability, State University of New York, 8 F.C.C. Rcd. 456 (1993).

⁴⁹ Id.

⁵⁰ Notice of Apparent Liability, KGB Incorporated, 7 F.C.C. Rcd. 3207 (1992). See also Great American Television and Radio Company, Inc., 6 F.C.C. Rcd. 3692 (1990); WIOD, Inc., 6 F.C.C. Rcd. 3704 (1989).

⁵¹ 6 F.C.C. Rcd. 3692.

⁵² Notice of Apparent Liability, Citicasters Co., 13 F.C.C. Rcd. 22004 (1998).

⁵³ The Commission has recently indicated that "the mere fact that specific words or phrases are not sustained or repeated does not mandate a finding that material that is otherwise patently offensive to the broadcast medium is not indecent." In the Matter of Complaints Against Various Broadcast Licensees Regarding the Airing of the "Golden Globe Awards"

determined that the following phrase — “The hell I did, I drove mother-f[]er, oh.” — uttered by an announcer during a radio morning show, was not indecent.⁵⁴ The Commission declined to take action regarding the broadcast because it contained only a “fleeting and isolated utterance . . . within the context of live and spontaneous programming.”⁵⁵ Certain fleeting references may, however, be found indecent where other factors contribute to the broadcast’s patent offensiveness. For example, the Commission has imposed forfeitures on stations for airing jokes that refer to sexual activities with children.⁵⁶

Pandering or Titillating Nature of Material. In determining whether broadcast material is indecent, the Commission also looks to the purpose for which the material is being presented. Indecency findings generally involve material that is presented in a pandering or titillating manner, or material that is presented for the shock value of its language. For example, the Commission deemed a radio call-in survey about oral sex to be indecent based in part on the fact that the material was presented in a pandering and titillating manner.⁵⁷

Whether a broadcast is presented in a pandering or titillating manner depends on the context in which the potentially indecent material is presented. Explicit images or graphic language does not necessarily mean that the broadcast is being presented in a pandering or titillating manner. For example, the Commission declined to impose a forfeiture on a television station for airing portions of a high school sex education class that included the use of “sex organ models to demonstrate the use of various birth control devices.”⁵⁸ In dismissing the complaint, the Commission held that, “[a]lthough the program dealt with sexual issues, the material presented was clinical or instructional in nature and not presented in a pandering, titillating, or vulgar manner.”⁵⁹

Golden Globe Awards Decision

As noted above, on March 18, 2004, the Federal Communications Commission overturned an earlier decision by the Commission’s Enforcement Bureau regarding the broadcast of the word “f[]ing” during the 2003 Golden Globe Awards. In the earlier decision, the Enforcement Bureau had found that the broadcast of the program

⁵³ (...continued)

Program, File No. EB-03-IH-0110 (March 18, 2004). See section entitled “Golden Globe Awards Decision,” below.

⁵⁴ L.M. Communications of South Carolina, Inc., 7 F.C.C. Rcd. 1595 (1992).

⁵⁵ Id.

⁵⁶ See Notice of Apparent Liability, Temple Radio, Inc., 12 F.C.C. Rcd. 21828 (1997); Notice of Apparent Liability, EZ New Orleans, Inc., 12 F.C.C. Rcd. 4147 (1997).

⁵⁷ Notice of Apparent Liability, Rusk Corporation, Radio Station KLOL, 5 F.C.C. Rcd. 6332 (1990).

⁵⁸ In the Matter of Application for Review of the Dismissal of an Indecency Complaint Against King Broadcasting Co., 5 F.C.C. Rcd. 2971 (1990).

⁵⁹ Id.

including the utterance did not violate federal restrictions regarding the broadcast of obscene and indecent material.⁶⁰ The Bureau dismissed the complaints primarily because the language in question did not describe or depict sexual or excretory activities or organs.

In its March 18 Memorandum Opinion and Order, the full Commission concluded that the broadcast of the Golden Globe Awards did include material that violated prohibitions on the broadcast of indecent and profane material.⁶¹ In reversing the Bureau, the Commission determined that the “phrase at issue is within the scope of our indecency definition because it does depict or describe sexual activities.”⁶² Although the Commission “recognize[d] NBC’s argument that the ‘F-Word’ here was used ‘as an intensifier,’” it nevertheless concluded that, “given the core meaning of the ‘F-Word,’ any use of that word or a variation, in any context, inherently has a sexual connotation, and therefore falls within the first prong of our indecency definition.”⁶³

Upon finding that the phrase in question fell within the first prong of the definition of “indecency,” the Commission turned to the question of whether the broadcast was patently offensive under contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium. The Commission determined that the broadcast was patently offensive, noting that “[t]he ‘F-Word’ is one of the most vulgar, graphic and explicit descriptions of sexual activity in the English language,” and that “[t]he use of the ‘F-Word’ here, on a nationally telecast awards ceremony, was shocking and gratuitous.”⁶⁴ The Commission also rejected “prior Commission and staff action [that] have indicated that isolated or fleeting broadcasts of the ‘F-Word’ such as that here are not indecent or would not be acted upon,” concluding “that any such interpretation is no longer good law.”⁶⁵ The Commission further clarified its position, stating “that the mere fact that specific words or phrases are not sustained or repeated does not mandate a finding that material that is otherwise patently offensive to the broadcast medium is not indecent.”⁶⁶

⁶⁰ Id.

⁶¹ The Commission declined to impose a forfeiture on the broadcast licensees named in the complaint because they were not “on notice” regarding the new interpretations of the Commission’s regulations regarding broadcast indecency and the newly adopted definition of profanity. The Commission also indicated that it will not use its decision in this case adversely against the licensees during the license renewal process.

⁶² In the Matter of Complaints Against Various Broadcast Licensees Regarding Their Airing of the “Golden Globe Awards” Program, File No. EB-03-IH-0110 at 4 (March 18, 2004).

⁶³ Id. Similarly, in March, 2006, the FCC decided that “s[]” has an “inherently excretory connotation” and therefore could not be used from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. See, @ $#&*% Ken Burns! PBS Scrubbing G.I. Mouths With Soap, New York Observer, October 2, 2006, p. 1.

⁶⁴ Id. at 5.

⁶⁵ Id. at 6. See section entitled “Dwelling or Repetition of Potentially Indecent Material,” above.

⁶⁶ Id.

In addition to the determination that the utterance of the word “[]ing” during the Golden Globe Awards was indecent, the Commission also found, as an independent ground for its decision, that use of the word was “profane” in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1464.⁶⁷ In making this determination, the Commission cited dictionary definitions of “profanity” as “vulgar, irreverent, or coarse language,”⁶⁸ and a Seventh Circuit opinion stating that “profanity” is “construable as denoting certain of those personally reviling epithets naturally tending to provoke violent resentment or denoting language so grossly offensive to members of the public who actually hear it as to amount to a nuisance.”⁶⁹ The Commission acknowledged that its limited case law regarding profane speech has focused on profanity in the context of blasphemy, but stated that it would no longer limit its definition of profane speech in such manner. Pursuant to its adoption of this new definition of “profane,” the Commission stated that, depending on the context, the “‘F-Word’ and those words (or variants thereof) that are as highly offensive as the ‘F-Word’” would be considered “profane” if broadcast between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.⁷⁰ The Commission noted that other words would be considered on a case-by-case basis.

The Second Circuit’s decision in Fox Television Stations, Inc. v. FCC, discussed below at pages 16-17, did not involve the Bono case, but it effectively overturned it.

Super Bowl Halftime Show Decision

As noted above, on September 22, 2004, the FCC released a Notice of Apparent Liability for Forfeiture imposing a $550,000 forfeiture on several Viacom-owned CBS affiliates for the broadcast of the Super Bowl XXXVIII halftime show on February 1, 2004, in which a performer’s breast was exposed.⁷¹ The Commission determined that the show, which was aired at approximately 8:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time, violated its restrictions on the broadcast of indecent material.

In its analysis, the Commission determined that since the broadcast included a performance that culminated in “on-camera partial nudity,” and thus satisfied the first ⁶⁷ Id. at 7. It should be noted that, although in this case the Commission found that the broadcast in question was both indecent and profane, there are certain to be words that could be deemed “profane,” but do not fit the Commission’s definition of “indecent.” Under the newly adopted definition of “profanity,” many words could arguably be found “profane” because they provoke “violent resentment” or are otherwise “grossly offensive,” but not be found “indecent” because they do not refer to any sexual or excretory activity or organ or even “inherently” have a sexual connotation, as the Commission found the phrase that Bono uttered to have. Presumably, it is these words that the Commission will consider on a case-by-case basis.

⁶⁸ Id. at 7, citing Black’s Law Dictionary 1210 (6th ed. 1990) and American Heritage College Dictionary 1112 (4th ed. 2002).

⁶⁹ Id., citing Tallman v. United States, 465 F.2d 282, 286 (7th Cir. 1972).

⁷⁰ Id.

⁷¹ Complaints Against Various Television Licensees Concerning Their February 1, 2004, Broadcast of the Super Bowl XXXVIII Halftime Show, File No. EB-04-IH-0011 (September 22, 2004) [<http://www.fcc.gov/eb/Orders/2004/FCC-04-209A1.html>].

part of the indecency analysis, further scrutiny was warranted to determine whether the broadcast was “patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium.”⁷² The Commission found that the performance in question was “both explicit and graphic,” and rejected the licensees’ contention that since the exposure was fleeting, lasting only 19/32 of a second, it should not be deemed indecent.⁷³ In determining whether the material in question was intended to “pander to, titillate and shock the viewing audience,” the Commission noted that the performer’s breast was exposed after another performer sang, “gonna have you naked by the end of this song.”⁷⁴ The Commission found that the song lyrics, coupled with simulated sexual activities during the performance and the exposure of the breast, indicated that the purpose of the performance was to pander to, titillate and shock the audience, and the fact that the actual exposure of the breast was brief, as noted above, was not dispositive.⁷⁵

The Commission ordered each Viacom-owned CBS affiliate to pay the statutory maximum forfeiture of $27,500 for the broadcast, for a total forfeiture of $550,000. The forfeiture was imposed on the Viacom-owned affiliates because of Viacom’s participation in and planning of the Super Bowl halftime show with MTV networks, another Viacom subsidiary.⁷⁶

Following the issuance of the Notice of Apparent Liability for Forfeiture, the affiliates are “afforded a reasonable period of time (usually 30 days from the date of the notice) to show, in writing, why a forfeiture penalty should not be imposed or should be reduced, or to pay the forfeiture.”⁷⁷ CBS filed an opposition to the Notice of Apparent Liability on November 5, 2004. The opposition challenged the forfeiture on various grounds, including that the test for indecency was not met and that the forfeiture violates the First Amendment.

On March 15, 2006, the FCC issued a Forfeiture Order imposing a mandatory forfeiture in the amount of $550,000 on CBS for the airing of the 2004 Super Bowl halftime show.⁷⁸ CBS appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, which heard oral arguments in the case on September 11, 2007.⁷⁹

⁷² Id. at ¶ 11.

⁷³ Id. at ¶ 13.

⁷⁴ Id. at ¶ 14.

⁷⁵ Id.

⁷⁶ Id. at ¶¶ 17 - 24.

⁷⁷ 47 C.F.R. § 1.80(f)(3).

⁷⁸ In the Matter of Complaints Against Various Television Licensees Concerning Their February 1, 2004, Broadcast of the Super Bowl XXXVIII Halftime Show, File No. EB-04-IH-0011, FCC 06-19 (March 15, 2006).

⁷⁹ CBS Corp. v. Federal Communications Commission, No. 06-3575 (3d Cir.).

Other Recent Enforcement Actions

In addition to the Order regarding the 2004 Super Bowl halftime show, the FCC issued several Notices of Apparent Liability for various television broadcasts occurring between February 2, 2002, and March 8, 2005.⁸⁰

Of the six programs for which a forfeiture was proposed, two of the complaints were based on the use of “indecent” language, two were based on sexually explicit images, and two programs were cited for both language and sexual innuendo.⁸¹ In determining whether a forfeiture was appropriate, the Commission applied the modified analysis first used in the Golden Globe Awards Order with respect to language that is deemed “indecent,” and in the Super Bowl Halftime Show Order regarding sexually explicit imagery.⁸²

In addition to the Commission’s recent actions with respect to televised programming, the Commission had previously imposed forfeitures on a number of radio stations for broadcast indecency.⁸³ We now discuss two of its more recent high-profile actions related to radio programming. Each of these actions resulted in a consent decree between the Commission and the broadcaster.

Infinity Broadcasting. On October 2, 2003, the Commission issued a Notice of Apparent Liability to Infinity Broadcasting for airing portions of the “Opie & Anthony Show” during which the hosts conducted a contest entitled “Sex for Sam” which involved couples having sex in certain “risky” locations throughout New York City in an effort to win a trip.⁸⁴ The couples, accompanied by a station employee, were to have sex in as many of the designated locations as possible. They were assigned points based on the nature of the location and the activities in which they engaged. The station aired discussions between the hosts of the show and the station employee accompanying the couples which consisted of descriptions of the sexual activities of the participating couples and the locations in which they engaged in sexual activities. One discussion involved an description of a couple apparently engaging in sexual activities in St. Patrick’s Cathedral.

The Commission determined that the broadcast made “graphic and explicit references to sexual and excretory organs and activity” despite the fact that colloquial terms, rather than explicit or graphic terms, were used in the descriptions. The ⁸⁰ In the Matter of Complaints Regarding Various Television Broadcasts Between February 2, 2002 and March 8, 2005, FCC 06-17 (March 15, 2006).

⁸¹ Id. Also, three of the programs for which forfeitures were proposed were Spanish-language programs.

⁸² The Commission found violations, but declined to impose forfeitures with respect to several programs that were aired prior to the Golden Globe Awards Order, at a time when the Commission would not have taken enforcement actions against the isolated use of expletives. Id. at ¶¶ 100 - 137.

⁸³ For a complete list of recent actions related to broadcast indecency, see [<http://www.fcc.gov/eb/broadcast/obscind.html>].

⁸⁴ In the Matter of Infinity Broadcasting, et al., EB-02-IH-0685 (October 2, 2003).

Commission found that “[t]o the extent that the colloquial terms that the participants used to describe organs and activities could be described as innuendo rather than as direct references, they are nonetheless sufficient to render the material actionably indecent because the ‘sexual [and] excretory import’ of those references was ‘unmistakable.’”⁸⁵ The Commission also found that the hosts of the show “dwelled at length on and referred repeatedly to sexual or excretory activities and organs,” and that “the descriptions of sexual and excretory activity and organs were not in any way isolated and fleeting.”⁸⁶

On November 23, 2004, the FCC entered into a consent decree with Infinity regarding the Opie & Anthony NAL.⁸⁷ Pursuant to the decree, Infinity, a subsidiary of Viacom, agreed to make a voluntary contribution to the United States Treasury in the amount of $3.5 million and to adopt a company-wide compliance plan for the purpose of preventing the broadcast of indecent material. As part of the company-wide plan, Viacom agreed to install delay systems to edit “potentially problematic” live programming and to conduct training with respect to indecency regulations for all of its on-air talent and employees who participate in programming decisions.

Clear Channel Broadcasting. On January 27, 2004, the Commission issued a Notice of Apparent Liability to Clear Channel Broadcasting for repeated airings of the “Bubba, the Love Sponge” program which included indecent material.⁸⁸ The Commission found that all the broadcasts in question involved “conversations about such things as oral sex, penises, testicles, masturbation, intercourse, orgasms and breasts.”⁸⁹ The Commission determined that each of the broadcasts in question contained “sufficiently graphic and explicit references,” which were generally repeated throughout the broadcast in a pandering and titillating manner.

In one broadcast, the station aired a segment involving skits in which the voices of purported cartoon characters talk about drugs and sex.⁹⁰ The skits were inserted between advertisements for Cartoon Network’s Friday-night cartoons. The Commission determined that “the use of cartoon characters in such a sexually explicit manner during hours of the day when children are likely to be listening is shocking

⁸⁵ Id. at 8.

⁸⁶ Id. at 9. The Commission noted that the contest portion of the broadcast in question lasted over an hour and was reproduced in a 203-page transcript.

⁸⁷ See In the Matter of Viacom Inc., Infinity Radio Inc., et. al., FCC 04-268 (November 23, 2004) [http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/FCC-04-268A1.pdf]. The decree also covers several other actions pending against Viacom-owned Infinity Radio stations and broadcast television stations, but does not cover the proceedings related to the Super Bowl halftime show discussed supra.

⁸⁸ In the Matter of Clear Channel Broadcasting Licenses, Inc., et al., File No. EB-02-IH-0261 (January 27, 2004).

⁸⁹ Id. at 4.

⁹⁰ Id. at 5.

and makes this segment patently offensive.”⁹¹ The Commission also cited the “calculated and callous nature of the stations’ decision to impose this predictably offensive material upon young, vulnerable listeners” as “weighing heavily” in its determination.⁹²

On April 8, 2004, the Commission released another Notice of Apparent Liability against Clear Channel Communications for airing allegedly indecent material during the “Howard Stern Show.”⁹³ For the first time, the Commission sought to impose separate statutory maximum forfeitures for each indecent utterance during the program in question, rather than imposing a single fine for the entire program.⁹⁴

The Commission entered into a consent decree with Clear Channel on June 9, 2004. The decree requires Clear Channel to make a “voluntary contribution” of $1.75 million to the United States Treasury and outlines “a company-wide compliance plan for the purpose of preventing the broadcast over radio or television of material violative of the indecency laws.”⁹⁵ As part of the compliance plan, Clear Channel will “conduct training on obscenity and indecency for all on-air talent and employees who materially participate in programming decisions, which will include tutorials regarding material that the FCC does not permit broadcasters to air.”⁹⁶ The plan also requires Clear Channel to suspend any employee accused of airing, or who materially participates in the decision to air, obscene or indecent material while an investigation is conducted following the issuance of a Notice of Apparent Liability. Such employees will be terminated without delay if the NAL results in enforcement action by the FCC.

Fox Television Stations, Inc. v. FCC. On December 20, 2006, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit heard oral arguments in a case brought by four television networks — CBS, ABC, NBC, and Fox Television — challenging the FCC’s authority to regulate “indecent” material. The FCC had taken action against, among other broadcasts, two award shows, described in an Associated Press article as, “a December 9, 2002, broadcast of the Billboard Music Awards in which singer Cher used the phrase, ‘F — - ‘em,’ and a December 10, 2003, Billboard awards show in which reality show star Nicole Richie said: ‘Have you ever tried to get cow s — - out of a Prada purse? It’s not so f—— — simple.’”⁹⁷ These incidents raise the same questions that FCC’s action against the Bono expletive raised: whether a fleeting

⁹¹ Id. at 6.

⁹² Id.

⁹³ In the Matter of Clear Channel Broadcasting Licensees, File No. EB-03-IH — 159 (April 8, 2004).

⁹⁴ See Statement of Commissioner Michael J. Copps, [http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DOC-245911A1.pdf], p. 2.

⁹⁵ See In the Matter of Clear Channel Communications, Inc., FCC 04-128 (June 9, 2004) at [http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/FCC-04-128A1.pdf].

⁹⁶ Id. at 7.

⁹⁷ Larry Neumeister, Appeals court panel grills government lawyer in indecency case, Associated Press State & Local Wire (December 20, 2006).

isolated expletive is “indecent” under federal law, and, if so, whether the First Amendment permits the FCC to enforce the law by punishing broadcasters for such utterances.

On June 4, 2007, the Second Circuit, in a 2-1 decision, found “that the FCC’s new policy regarding ‘fleeting expletives’ represents a significant departure from positions previously taken by the agency and relied on by the broadcast industry. We further find that the FCC has failed to articulate a reasoned basis for this change in policy. Accordingly, we hold that the FCC’s new policy regarding ‘fleeting expletives’ is arbitrary and capricious under the Administrative Procedure Act.”⁹⁸

The court rejected several reasons that the FCC gave for departing from its previous positions. The FCC, for example, attempted to justify its stance on fleeting expletives on the basis that “granting an automatic exemption for ‘isolated or fleeting’ expletives unfairly forces viewers (including children) to take ‘the first blow.’”⁹⁹ The Second Circuit could not “accept this argument as a reasoned basis justifying the Commission’s new rule. First, the Commission provides no reasonable explanation for why it has changed its perception that a fleeting expletive was not a harmful ‘first blow’ for the nearly thirty years between Pacifica and Golden Globes. More problematic, however, is that the ‘first blow’ theory bears no rational connection to the Commission’s actual policy regarding fleeting expletives. As the FCC itself stressed during oral argument in this case, the Commission does not take the position that any occurrence of an expletive is indecent or profane under its rules. For example, although ‘there is no outright news exemption from our indecency rules,’ . . . the Commission will apparently excuse an expletive when it occurs during a ‘bona fide news interview’”¹⁰⁰

Another FCC argument that the court rejected was that it is “difficult (if not impossible) to distinguish whether a word is being used as an expletive or as a literal description of sexual or excretory functions.”¹⁰¹ The court found, “This defies any commonsense understanding of these words, which, as the general public knows, are often used in everyday conversation without any ‘sexual or excretory’ meaning. Bono’s exclamation . . . is a prime example of a non-literal use of the ‘F-Word’ that has no sexual connotation.”¹⁰²

The court also noted that the FCC’s decision was “devoid of any evidence that suggests a fleeting expletive is harmful,” which “would seem to be particularly relevant today when children likely hear this language far more often from other sources than they did in the 1970s when the Commission first began sanctioning

⁹⁸ Fox Television Stations, Inc. v. Federal Communications Commission, 489 F.3d 444, 447 (2d Cir. 2007), petition for cert. filed, No. 07-582 (November 1, 2007).

⁹⁹ Id. at 458.

¹⁰⁰ Id.

¹⁰¹ Id. at 459.

¹⁰² Id.

indecent speech.” In addition, the court found, “The Commission’s new approach to profanity is supported by even less analysis, reasoned or not.”¹⁰³

Having overturned the FCC policy on statutory grounds, the court had no occasion to decide whether it also violated the First Amendment. It explained, however, why it was “skeptical that the Commission can provide a reasonable explanation for its ‘fleeting expletive’ regime that would pass constitutional muster.”¹⁰⁴ The final section of this report examines this aspect of the court’s opinion.

Congressional Response

109th Congress.

Legislation addressing broadcast indecency was introduced during the 109th Congress.

H.R. 310, 109th Congress, entitled the Broadcast Decency Enforcement Act of 2005, would increase penalties for the broadcast of obscene, indecent, or profane material to a maximum of $500,000 for each violation, and would provide penalties for nonlicensees, such as artists and performers.¹⁰⁵ In addition to the increased forfeiture amount, the Federal Communications Commission would be able to require licensees to broadcast public service announcements that serve the educational and informational needs of children and require such announcements to reach an audience up to five times greater than the size of the audience that is estimated to have been reached by the obscene, indecent or profane broadcast. Also, any violation of the Commission’s indecency regulations could be considered when determining whether to grant or renew a broadcast license, and three or more indecency violations would trigger a license revocation proceeding. The legislation would also require the Commission to act upon allegations of indecency within 180 days of the receipt of the allegation.

On February 9, 2005, the House Committee on Energy and Commerce reported H.R. 310 favorably without amendment. The House passed H.R. 310 on February 16, with one amendment. The amendment made several nonsubstantive technical changes and added a section requiring the FCC to revise its policy statement regarding broadcast indecency within nine months of the date of enactment of the legislation and at least once every three years thereafter.¹⁰⁶

H.R. 1420, 109th Congress, entitled the Families for ED Advertising Decency Act, would require the Federal Communications Commission to revise its interpretations of, and enforcement policies concerning, the broadcast of indecent ¹⁰³ See text accompanying notes 67-70, supra.

¹⁰⁴ Id. at 462.

¹⁰⁵ This bill appears to be substantially similar to H.R. 3717, as reported by the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, on March 3, 2004.

¹⁰⁶ H.Amdt. 10. The FCC’s policy statement on broadcast indecency was released on April 6, 2001, and can be found at [<http://www.fcc.gov/eb/Orders/2001/fcc01090.html>].

material to treat as indecent any advertisement for a medication for the treatment of erectile dysfunction, thus prohibiting the airing of such advertisements between the hours of 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.

H.R. 1440, 109th Congress, entitled the Stamp Out Censorship Act of 2005, would prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from imposing forfeitures for indecency on nonbroadcast programming.

S. 193, 109th Congress, also entitled the Broadcast Decency Enforcement Act of 2005, was signed into law by the President on June 15, 2006, and became P.L. 109-235. It increases the maximum forfeiture for the broadcast of obscene, indecent, or profane material to $325,000 for each violation, with a cap of $3,000,000 for any single act or failure to act.¹⁰⁷

S. 616, 109th Congress, entitled the Indecent and Gratuitous and Excessively Violent Programming Control Act of 2005, would, among other things, require the Federal Communications Commission to study the effectiveness of measures used by multichannel video programming distributors to protect children from exposure to indecent and violent programming. If the Commission were to determine that such measures were not effective, the legislation directs the Commission to initiate a rulemaking proceeding to adopt measures to protect children from indecent programming carried by multichannel video programming distributors during the hours when children are reasonably likely to be a substantial portion of the television audience. The bill would also increase the penalty for the broadcast of obscene, indecent, or profane language or images to $500,000, with a maximum forfeiture for any violations occurring in a given 24-hour period set at $3,000,000. The Commission would be required to take certain factors into consideration when imposing a forfeiture, and would be required to conduct public hearings or forums prior to the imposition of a forfeiture. Additionally, broadcast licensees would be allowed to preempt programming from a network organization that it deems obscene, and all television and radio broadcast licensees and multichannel video programming distributors would be required to provide a warning of the specific content of each recorded or scripted program it broadcasts.

110th Congress.

Fewer bills have been introduced relating to broadcast indecency during the 110th Congress than during the 109th Congress.

H.R. 2738, 110th Congress, entitled the Family and Consumer Choice Act of 2007, would not apply to broadcast indecency but would regulate indecency by requiring multichannel video programming distributors (cable operators, broadcast satellite service providers, and multichannel multipoint distribution services, among others) to choose among three options. First, providers could choose not to transmit any material defined as indecent under the FCC's broadcast indecency policies on any channel on their expanded basic tier between certain hours; second, providers could choose to scramble any channel, free of charge, that a subscriber does not wish to receive; or, third, providers could make available a “family tier” of channels that would consist only of channels that do not transmit indecent programming. This bill was referred to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce on June 15, 2007.

¹⁰⁷ See additional discussion on page 7, above.

S. 602, 110th Congress, entitled the Child Safe Viewing Act of 2007, would encourage the use of advanced blocking technologies. The bill would require the FCC to examine blocking technologies that could be utilized across various platforms, including wired, wireless, and Internet, and to consider measures that would encourage or require the use of these technologies. Advanced blocking technologies aid parents in denying children access to indecent or objectionable programming available over broadcast television, cable, Internet, and other media.

S. 602 was introduced on February 15, 2007, and referred to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

H.R. 3559 and S. 1780, 110th Congress, entitled the Protecting Children from Indecent Programming Act, would amend section 16 of the Public Telecommunications Act of 1992, 47 U.S.C. § 303 note, to require the FCC to “maintain a policy that a single word or image may constitute indecent programming.” On December 5, 2007, the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation reported S. 1780 without amendment (S.Rept. 110-236, 110th Cong., 1st sess. 2007).

Would Prohibiting the Broadcast of “Indecent” Words Regardless of Context Violate the First Amendment?

In 1978, in Federal Communications Commission v. Pacifica Foundation, the Supreme Court upheld, against a First Amendment challenge, an action that the FCC took against a radio station for broadcasting a recording of George Carlin’s “Filthy Words” monologue at 2 p.m.¹⁰⁸ The Court has not decided a case on the issue of “indecent” speech on broadcast radio or television since then, but it did cite Pacifica with approval in 1997, when, in Reno v. ACLU, it contrasted regulation of the broadcast media with regulation of the Internet.¹⁰⁹ Nevertheless, the Court in Reno did not hold that Pacifica remains good law, and arguments have been made that the proliferation of cable television channels has rendered archaic Pacifica’s denial of full First Amendment rights to broadcast media.

¹⁰⁸ 438 U.S. 726 (1978). The FCC’s action was to issue “a declaratory order granting the complaint,” and “state that the order would be ‘associated with the station’s license file,’” which means that the FCC could consider it when it came time for the station’s license renewal. Id. at 730.

¹⁰⁹ 521 U.S. 844, 868 (1997) (noting that “the history of the extensive regulation of the broadcast medium” and “the scarcity of available frequencies” are factors “not present in cyberspace,” and striking down parts of the Communications Decency Act of 1996). The Court also cited Pacifica with approval in United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group, Inc., 529 U.S. 803, 813-814 (2000), and in Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234, 245 (2002).

Even if Pacifica remains valid in this respect, Pacifica did not hold that the First Amendment permits the ban either of an occasional expletive on broadcast media, or of programs that would not be likely to attract youthful audiences, even if such programs contain “indecent” language. On these points, Justice Stevens wrote for the Court in Pacifica:

It is appropriate, in conclusion, to emphasize the narrowness of our holding. This case does not involve a two-way radio conversation between a cab driver and a dispatcher, or a telecast of an Elizabethan comedy. We have not decided that an occasional expletive in either setting would justify any sanction. . . . The time of day was emphasized by the Commission. The content of the program in which the language is used will also affect the composition of the audience. . . .¹¹⁰

In a footnote to the last sentence of this quotation, the Court added: “Even a prime-time recitation of Geoffrey Chaucer’s Miller’s Tale would not be likely to command the attention of many children. . . .”¹¹¹ At the same time, Justice Stevens acknowledged that the Carlin monologue has political content: “The monologue does present a point of view; it attempts to show that the words it uses are ‘harmless’ and that our attitudes toward them are ‘essentially silly.’ The Commission objects, [however,] not to this point of view, but to the way in which it is expressed.”¹¹² The Court commented: “If there were any reason to believe that the Commission’s characterization of the Carlin monologue as offensive could be traced to its political content — or even to the fact that it satirized contemporary attitudes about four-letter words — First Amendment protection might be required.”¹¹³

There appears to be some tension between this comment and the Court’s remark about Chaucer, as any attempt to censor Chaucer would presumably also be based not on its ideas but on the way its ideas are expressed. But, as noted above, the Court’s remark about Chaucer was a footnote to its comment that “[t]he content of the program in which the language is used will also affect the composition of the audience. . . .” Therefore, the difference that Justice Stevens apparently perceived between Chaucer and Carlin was that, even if both have literary, artistic, or political value, only the latter would be likely to attract a youthful audience. Arguably, then, ¹¹⁰ Pacifica, supra, 438 U.S. at 750. A federal court of appeals subsequently held unconstitutional a federal statute that banned “indecent” broadcasts 24 hours a day, but, in a later case, the same court upheld the present statute, 47 U.S.C. § 303 note, which bans “indecent” broadcasts from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. Action for Children’s Television v. FCC, 932 F.2d 1504 (D.C. Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 913 (1992); Action for Children’s Television v. FCC, 58 F.3d 654 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (en banc), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1043 (1996).

¹¹¹ Id. at 750, n.29.

¹¹² Id. at 746 n.22. These two sentences and the text accompanying the next footnote, although part of Justice Stevens’ opinion, are in a part of the opinion (IV-B) joined by only two other justices. Every other quotation from Pacifica in this report was from a part of the opinion that a majority of the justices joined.

¹¹³ Id. at 746.

Pacifica would permit the censorship, during certain hours, of the broadcast even of works of art that are likely to attract a youthful audience.¹¹⁴

If so, this would be contrary to the Court’s opposition, in other contexts, to the censorship of works of art. The Court has held that even “materials [that] depict or describe patently offensive ‘hard core’ sexual conduct,” which would otherwise be obscene, may not be prohibited if they have “serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.”¹¹⁵ In addition, the “harmful to minors” statutes of the sort that the Supreme Court upheld in Ginsberg v. New York generally define “harmful to minors” to parallel the Supreme Court’s definition of “obscenity,” and thus prohibit distributing to minors only material that lacks serious value for minors.¹¹⁶ This suggests that, if the FCC or Congress prohibited the broadcast during certain hours of “indecent” words regardless of context, the Court might be troubled by the prohibition’s application to works with serious value, even though Pacifica allowed the censorship of Carlin’s monologue, despite its apparently having serious value.

Yet, as noted, Justice Stevens’ expressed a distinction in Pacifica between a point of view and the way in which it is expressed, and, though a majority of the justices did not join the part of the opinion that drew this distinction, a majority of the justices, by concurring in Pacifica’s holding, indicated that the political (or literary or artistic) content of Carlin’s monologue did not prevent its censorship during certain hours on broadcast radio and television. Therefore, it appears that, in deciding the constitutionality of an FCC or a congressional action prohibiting the broadcasting, during certain hours, of material with “indecent” words, the Court ¹¹⁴ There also appears to be some tension between, on the one hand, Justice Stevens’ distinction in Pacifica between a point of view and the way in which it is expressed, and, on the other hand, the Court’s statement in Cohen v. California “that much linguistic expression serves a dual communicative function: it conveys not only ideas capable of relatively precise, detached explication, but otherwise inexpressible emotions as well. In fact, words are often chosen as much for their emotive as their cognitive force. We cannot sanction the view that the Constitution, while solicitous of the cognitive content of individual speech, has little or no regard for that emotive function which, practically speaking, may often be the more important element of the overall message sought to be communicated.” 403 U.S. 15, 26 (1971) (upholding the First Amendment right, in the corridor of a courthouse, to wear a jacket bearing the words “F[] the Draft”). Arguably, Carlin’s use of “indecent” words not only served an emotive purpose, but served to indicate the precise words to whose censorship he was objecting. Yet Pacifica was decided after Cohen, which suggests that Cohen does not lessen the precedential value of Pacifica.

¹¹⁵ Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 27, 24 (1973). In addition, in striking down parts of the Communications Decency Act of 1996, the Court expressed concern that the statute may “extend to discussions about prison rape or safe sexual practices, artistic images that include nude subjects, and arguably the card catalogue of the Carnegie Library.” Reno v. ACLU, supra, 521 U.S. at 878. And, in striking down a federal statute that prohibited child pornography that was produced without the use of an actual child, the Court expressed concern that the statute “prohibits speech despite its serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.” Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234, 246 (2002). In neither of these cases, however, did the Court state that its holding turned on the statute’s application to works of serious value.

¹¹⁶ 390 U.S. 629 (1968).

might be troubled by its application to works with serious value only if those works would, like Chaucer’s, not likely attract a substantial youthful audience.

In sum, the Court did not hold that the FCC could prohibit an occasional expletive, and did not hold that the FCC could prohibit offensive words in programs — even prime-time programs — that children would be unlikely to watch or listen to. The Court did not hold that the FCC could not take these actions, as the question whether it could was not before the Court. But the Court’s language quoted above renders Pacifica of uncertain precedential value in deciding whether a ban, during certain hours, on the broadcast of “indecent” words regardless of context would be constitutional.

In the “Filthy Words” monologue, as the Supreme Court described it, George Carlin “began by referring to his thoughts about ‘the words you couldn’t say on the public, ah, airwaves, um, the ones you definitely wouldn’t say, ever.’ He proceeded to list those words and repeat them over and over in a variety of colloquialisms.” The FCC, at the time, used essentially the same standard for “indecent” that it uses today: “[T]he concept of ‘indecent’ is intimately connected with the exposure of children to language that describes, in terms patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards for the broadcast medium, sexual or excretory activities and organs. . . .”¹¹⁷

Most of Carlin’s uses of the “filthy words,” it appears from reading his monologue, which is included as an appendix to the Court’s opinion, seem designed to show the words’ multiple uses, apart from describing sexual or excretory activities or organs. Nevertheless, “the Commission concluded that certain words depicted sexual or excretory activities in a patently offensive manner. . . .”¹¹⁸ Therefore, one might argue that, even if, under Pacifica, the First Amendment does not protect, during certain hours, the use on broadcast media of words that depict sexual or excretory activities in a patently offensive manner, it nevertheless might protect the use of those same words “as an adjective or expletive to emphasize an exclamation” (to quote the FCC Enforcement Bureau’s opinion in the Bono case).

A counterargument might be that, in Pacifica, the Court noted that “the normal definition of ‘indecent’ merely refers to nonconformance with accepted standards of morality.”¹¹⁹ This suggests the possibility that the Court would have ruled the same way in Pacifica if the FCC had defined “indecent” loosely enough to include the use of a patently offensive word “as an adjective or expletive to emphasize an exclamation.” But this is speculative, as the Court did not so rule. Further, as noted above, Court emphasized the narrowness of its holding, noting that it had “not decided that an occasional expletive . . . would justify any sanction. . . .”

¹¹⁷ Pacifica, supra, 438 U.S. at 731-732.

¹¹⁸ Id. at 732 (distinguishing “indecent” from “obscene” and “profane” in 18 U.S.C. § 1464).

¹¹⁹ Id. at 740.

On what basis did the Court in Pacifica find that the FCC’s action did not violate the First Amendment? In Part IV-C of opinion, which was joined by a majority of the justices, Justice Stevens wrote:

[O]f all forms of communication, it is broadcasting that has received the most limited First Amendment protection. Thus, although other speakers cannot be licensed except under laws that carefully define and narrow official discretion, a broadcaster may be deprived of his license and his forum if the Commission decides that such an action would serve “the public interest, convenience, and necessity.” Similarly, although the First Amendment protects newspaper publishers from being required to print the replies of those whom they criticize, Miami Herald Publishing Co. v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, it affords no such protection to broadcasters; on the contrary, they must give free time to the victims of their criticism. Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. FCC, 395 U.S. 367.

The reasons for these distinctions are complex, but two have relevance to the present case. First, the broadcast media have established a uniquely pervasive presence in the lives of all Americans. Patently offensive, indecent material presented over the airwaves confronts the citizen, not only in public, but in the privacy of the home, where the individual’s right to be left alone plainly outweighs the First Amendment rights of an intruder. Rowan v. Post Office Dept., 397 U.S. 728. . . . To say that one may avoid further offense by turning off the radio when he hears indecent language is like saying that the remedy for an assault is to run away after the first blow.

Second, broadcasting is uniquely accessible to children, even those too young to read. . . . Bookstores and motion picture theaters . . . may be prohibited from making indecent material available to children. We held in Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, that the government’s interest in the “well-being of its youth” and in supporting “parents’ claim to authority in their own household” justified the regulation of otherwise protected expression. . . .¹²⁰

In sum, the Court held that, on broadcast radio and television, during certain times of day, certain material may be prohibited because (1) it is patently offensive and indecent, and (2) it threatens the well-being of minors and their parents’ authority in their own household. This raises the question of the extent to which the Court continues to allow the government (1) to treat broadcast media differently from other media, and (2) to censor speech on the ground that it is patently offensive and indecent, or threatens the well-being of minors and their parents’ authority in their own household.

Broadcast Media. In Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. FCC, which the Court cited in the above quotation from Pacifica, the Court upheld the FCC’s “fairness doctrine,” which “imposed on radio and television broadcasters the requirement that discussion of public issues be presented on broadcast stations, and that each side of those issues must be given fair coverage.”¹²¹ The reason that the Court upheld the imposition of the fairness doctrine on broadcast media, though it would not uphold its imposition on print media, is that “[w]here there are substantially more individuals who want to broadcast than there are frequencies to allocate, it is idle to posit an unabridgeable First Amendment right to broadcast comparable to the right of every individual to speak, write, or publish.”¹²² “Licenses to broadcast,” the Court added, “do not confer ownership of designated frequencies, but only the temporary privilege of using them. 47 U.S.C. § 301. Unless renewed, they expire within three years. 47 U.S.C. § 307(d). The statute mandates the issuance of licenses if the ‘public convenience, interest, or necessity will be served thereby.’ 47 U.S.C. § 307(a).”¹²³

¹²⁰ Id. at 748-750.

¹²¹ 395 U.S. 367, 369 (1969).

The Court in Red Lion then noted:

It is argued that even if at one time the lack of available frequencies for all who wished to use them justified the Government’s choice of those who would best serve the public interest . . . this condition no longer prevails so that continuing control is not justified. To this there are several answers. Scarcity is not entirely a thing of the past.¹²⁴

With the plethora of cable channels today, has spectrum scarcity now become a thing of the past? In Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, the Court held that the scarcity rationale does not apply to cable television:

[C]able television does not suffer from the inherent limitations that characterize the broadcast medium . . . [S]oon there may be no practical limitation on the number of speakers who may use the cable medium. Nor is there any danger of physical interference between two cable speakers attempting to use the same channel. In light of these fundamental technological differences between broadcast and cable transmission, application of a more relaxed standard of scrutiny adopted in Red Lion and the other broadcast cases is inapt when determining the First Amendment validity of cable regulation.”¹²⁵

One might argue that, if the scarcity rationale does not apply to cable television, then it should not apply to broadcast television either, because a person who because of scarcity cannot start a broadcast channel can start a cable channel.¹²⁶ But the Court has not ruled on the question; in Turner it wrote: “Although courts and commentators have criticized the scarcity rationale since its inception, we have declined to question

¹²² Id. at 388.

¹²³ Id. at 394.

¹²⁴ Id. at 396.

¹²⁵ 512 U.S. 622, 639 (1994). In Turner, the Court held that the “must carry” rules, which “require cable television systems to devote a portion of their channels to the transmission of local broadcast television stations,” id. at 626, were content-neutral and therefore not subject to strict scrutiny. The Court remanded and ultimately upheld the rules. Turner Broadcasting System, Inc., 520 U.S. 180 (1997).

¹²⁶ In the court of appeals decision upholding the current statute that bans “indecent” broadcasts from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., a dissenting judge wrote of “the utterly irrational distinction that Congress has created between broadcast and cable operators. No one disputes that cable exhibits more and worse indecency than does broadcast. And cable television is certainly pervasive in our country.” Action for Children’s Television v. FCC, supra, 58 F.3d at 671 (emphasis in original) (Edwards, C.J., dissenting).

its continuing validity as support for our broadcast jurisprudence, and see no reason to do so here.”¹²⁷

In 1987, however, the FCC abolished the fairness doctrine, on First Amendment grounds, noting that technological developments and advancements in the telecommunications marketplace have provided a basis for the Supreme Court to reconsider its holding in Red Lion. The FCC’s decision was upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and the Supreme Court declined to review the case.¹²⁸ The court of appeals did not rule on constitutional grounds, but rather concluded “that the FCC’s decision that the fairness doctrine no longer served the public interest was neither arbitrary, capricious nor an abuse of discretion, and [we] are convinced that it would have acted on that finding to terminate the doctrine even in the absence of its belief that the doctrine was no longer constitutional.”¹²⁹

But, whether or not spectrum scarcity has become a thing of the past, it would apparently would not today justify governmental restrictions on “indecent” speech. This is because, subsequent to the Court in Turner declining to question the applicability of the scarcity rationale to broadcast media, a plurality of justices noted, in Denver Area Educational Telecommunications Consortium, Inc. v. FCC, that, though spectrum scarcity continued to justify the “structural regulations at issue there [in Turner] (the ‘must carry’ rules), it has little to do with a case that involves the effects of television viewing on children. Those effects are the result of how parents and children view television programming, and how pervasive and intrusive that programming is. In that respect, cable and broadcast television differ little, if at all.”¹³⁰ The plurality therefore upheld a federal statute that permits cable operators to prohibit indecent material on leased access channels. Thus, it appears that the Court today would not cite spectrum scarcity to justify restrictions on “indecent” material on broadcast media, but it might cite broadcast media’s pervasiveness and intrusiveness.

Subsequent to Denver Area, in United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group, Inc., the Court held that cable television has full First Amendment protection; i.e.,

¹²⁷ 512 U.S. at 638 (citation omitted).

¹²⁸ Syracuse Peace Council v. FCC, 867 F.2d 654 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1019 (1990).

¹²⁹ Id. at 669. In Arkansas AFL-CIO v. FCC, 11 F.3d 1430 (8th Cir. 1993) (en banc), the court of appeals held that Congress had not codified the fairness doctrine and that the FCC’s decision to eliminate it was a reasonable interpretation of the statutory requirement that licensees operate in the public interest.

¹³⁰ 518 U.S. 727, 748 (1996). The plurality added that cable television “is as ‘accessible to children’ as over-the-air broadcasting, if not more so,” has also “established a uniquely pervasive presence in the lives of all Americans,” and can also “‘confron[t] the citizen’ in ‘the privacy of the home,’ . . . with little or no prior warning.” Id. at 744-745. Justice Souter concurred that “today’s plurality opinion rightly observes that the characteristics of broadcast radio that rendered indecency particularly threatening in Pacifica, that is, its intrusion into the house and accessibility to children, are also present in the case of cable television. . . .” Id. at 776.

content-based restrictions on cable television receive strict scrutiny.¹³¹ Thus, if, as the Court said in Denver Area, cable and broadcast media differ little, if at all, with respect to the regulation of “indecent” material, and, if, as the Court said in Playboy, cable television receives strict scrutiny, then, arguably, broadcast media would also receive strict scrutiny with regard to restrictions on “indecent” material.¹³² It is possible, however, that, if cable and broadcast media differ little, then the Court might apply Pacifica to both broadcast and cable, rather than to neither.¹³³ In any event, as noted above, even if the Court were to continue to apply Pacifica to restrictions on broadcast media, this does not necessarily mean that it would uphold a ban on the broadcast of “indecent” language regardless of context, as Pacifica did not hold that an occasional expletive would justify a sanction.

Strict Scrutiny. We now consider the analysis that the Court might apply if it chooses not to apply Pacifica in deciding the constitutionality of a ban on the broadcast of “indecent” language regardless of context. The Court in Pacifica, as noted, offered two reasons why the FCC could prohibit offensive speech on broadcast media: “First, the broadcast media have established a uniquely pervasive presence in the lives of all Americans. Patently offensive, indecent material presented over the airwaves confronts the citizen, not only in public, but in the privacy of the home. . . . Second, broadcasting is uniquely accessible to children, even those too young to read,” and the government has an interest in the “well-being of its youth” and “in supporting ‘parents’ claim to authority in their own household.” The first of these reasons apparently refers to adults as well as to children.

Ordinarily, when the government restricts speech, including “indecent” speech, on the basis of its content, the restriction, if challenged, will be found constitutional ¹³¹ 529 U.S. 803, 813 (2000) (striking down a federal statute that required distributors to fully scramble or fully block signal bleed to non-subscribers to cable channels; “signal bleed” refers to the audio or visual portions of cable television programs that non-subscribers to a cable channel may be able to hear or see despite the fact that the programs have been scrambled to prevent the non-subscribers from hearing or seeing them).

¹³² An earlier district court case held that Pacifica does not apply to cable television because of several differences between cable and broadcasting. For one, “[i]n the cable medium, the physical scarcity that justifies content regulation in broadcasting is not present.” For another, as a subscriber medium, “cable TV is not an intruder but an invitee whose invitation can be carefully circumscribed.” Community Television v. Wilkinson, 611 F. Supp. 1099 (D. Utah 1985), aff’d, 800 F.2d 989 (10th Cir. 1986), aff’d, 480 U.S. 926 (1987) (striking down Utah Cable Television Programming Decency Act). The court of appeals did not discuss the constitutional issue beyond stating that it agreed with the district court’s reasons for its holding. 800 F.2d at 991. A summary affirmance by the Supreme Court, as in this case, is “an affirmance of the judgment only,” and does not indicate approval of the reasoning of the court below. Mandel v. Bradley, 432 U.S. 173, 176 (1977).

¹³³ See CRS Report RL33170, Constitutionality of Applying the FCC’s Indecency Restriction to Cable Television, by Henry Cohen, which concludes that “it appears likely that a court would find that to apply the FCC’s indecency restriction to cable television would be unconstitutional.”

only if it satisfies “strict scrutiny.”¹³⁴ This means that the government must prove that the restriction serves “to promote a compelling interest” and is “the least restrictive means to further the articulated interest.”¹³⁵ The Court in Pacifica did not apply this test or any weaker First Amendment test, and did not explain why it did not. Its reason presumably was that the FCC’s action restricted speech only on broadcast media. If, however, the Court were not to apply Pacifica in determining the constitutionality of a ban, during certain hours, on the broadcast of “indecent” language regardless of context, then it would apparently apply strict scrutiny.

If the Court were to apply strict scrutiny in making this determination, it seems unlikely that it would find the first reason cited in Pacifica — sparing citizens, including adults, from patently offensive or indecent words — to constitute a compelling governmental interest. The Court has held that the government may not prohibit the use of offensive words unless they “fall within [a] relatively few categories of instances,” such as obscenity, fighting words, or words “thrust upon unwilling or unsuspecting viewers.”¹³⁶

If the Court were to apply strict scrutiny in determining the constitutionality of a ban, during certain hours, on the broadcast of “indecent” language regardless of context, it also might not find the second reason cited in Pacifica — protecting minors from patently offensive and indecent words and “supporting ‘parents’ claim to authority in their own household” — to constitute a compelling governmental interest. When the Court considers the constitutionality of a restriction on speech, it ordinarily — even when the speech lacks full First Amendment protection and the court applies less than strict scrutiny — requires the government to “demonstrate that the recited harms are real, not merely conjectural, and that the regulation will in fact alleviate these harms in a direct and material way.”¹³⁷ With respect to restrictions designed to deny minors access to sexually explicit material, by contrast, the courts appear to assume, without requiring evidence, that such material is harmful to minors, or to consider it “obscene as to minors,” even if it is not obscene as to adults, and therefore not entitled to First Amendment protection with respect to minors, ¹³⁴ Sable Communications of California v. Federal Communications Commission, 492 U.S. 115 (1989); Action for Children’s Television v. FCC, supra, 932 F.2d at 1509.

¹³⁵ Id. at 126.

¹³⁶ Cohen v. California, supra, 403 U.S. at 19, 21. Under Pacifica, broadcast media do thrust words upon unwilling or unsuspecting viewers, but, if a court were to apply strict scrutiny to a ban on the broadcast of “indecent” language regardless of context, then it would not be following Pacifica.

¹³⁷ Turner Broadcasting, supra, 512 U.S. at 664 (incidental restriction on speech). See also, Edenfield v. Fane, 507 U.S. 761, 770-771 (1993) (restriction on commercial speech); Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 392 (2000) (restriction on campaign contributions). In all three of these cases, the government had restricted less-than-fully protected speech, so the Court did not apply strict scrutiny. Because offensive words are apparently entitled to full First Amendment protection (except under Pacifica and in the instances cited in Cohen v. California, quoted in the text above), it seems all the more likely that the Court, if it applied strict scrutiny instead of Pacifica to a challenge to a ban on the broadcast of “indecent” words regardless of context, would require the government to demonstrate that harms it recites are real and that the ban would alleviate these harms in a direct and material way.

whether it is harmful to them or not.¹³⁸ A word used as a mere adjective or expletive, however, arguably does not constitute sexually oriented material.¹³⁹ Therefore, if a court applied strict scrutiny to decide the constitutionality of a ban, during certain ¹³⁸ Interactive Digital Software Association v. St. Louis County, Missouri, 329 F.3d 954, 959 (8th Cir. 2003). The Supreme Court has “recognized that there is a compelling interest in protecting the physical and psychological well-being of minors. This interest extends to shielding minors from the influence of literature that is not obscene by adult standards.” Sable, supra, 492 U.S. at 126. The Court has also upheld a state law banning the distribution to minors of “so-called ‘girlie’ magazines” even as it acknowledged that “[i]t is very doubtful that this finding [that such magazines are “a basic factor in impairing the ethical and moral development of our youth”] expresses an accepted scientific fact.” Ginsberg v. New York, supra, 390 U.S. at 631, 641. “To sustain state power to exclude [such material from minors],” the Court wrote, “requires only that we be able to say that it was not irrational for the legislature to find that exposure to material condemned by the statute is harmful to minors.” Id. at 641. Ginsberg thus “invokes the much less exacting ‘rational basis’ standard of review,” rather than strict scrutiny. Interactive Digital Software Association, supra, 329 F.3d at 959.

A federal district court wrote:

We are troubled by the absence of evidence of harm presented both before Congress and before us that the viewing of signal bleed of sexually explicit programming causes harm to children and that the avoidance of this harm can be recognized as a compelling State interest. We recognize that the Supreme Court’s jurisprudence does not require empirical evidence. Only some minimal amount of evidence is required when sexually explicit programming and children are involved.

Playboy Entertainment Group, Inc. v. United States, 30 F. Supp.2d 702, 716 (D. Del. 1998), aff’d, 529 U.S. 803 (2000). The district court therefore found that the statute served a compelling governmental interest, though it held it unconstitutional because it found that the statute did not constitute the least restrictive means to advance the interest. The Supreme Court affirmed on the same ground, apparently assuming the existence of a compelling governmental interest, but finding a less restrictive means that could have been used.

In another case, a federal court of appeals, upholding the current statute that bans “indecent” broadcasts from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., noted “that the Supreme Court has recognized that the Government’s interest in protecting children extends beyond shielding them from physical and psychological harm. The statute that the Court found constitutional in Ginsberg sought to protect children from exposure to materials that would ‘impair [their] ethical and moral development. . . . Congress does not need the testimony of psychiatrists and social scientists in order to take note of the coarsening of impressionable minds that can result from a persistent exposure to sexually explicit material. . . .” Action for Children’s Television v. FCC, supra, 58 F.3d at 662 (brackets and italics supplied by the court). A dissenting judge in the case noted that, “[t]here is not one iota of evidence in the record . . . to support the claim that exposure to indecency is harmful — indeed, the nature of the alleged ‘harm’ is never explained.” Id. at 671 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (Edwards, C.J., dissenting).

¹³⁹ The full Commission’s decision in the Bono case stated that “any use of that word or a variation, in any context, inherently has a sexual connotation.” But this does not necessarily mean that it is sexually oriented enough to cause the courts to assume without evidence that it is harmful to minors.

hours, on the broadcast of “indecent” words regardless of context, then, in determining the presence of a compelling interest, the court might require the government to “demonstrate that the recited harms are real, not merely conjectural, and that the regulation will in fact alleviate these harms in a direct and material way.” This could raise the question, not raised in Pacifica, of whether hearing such words is harmful to minors. More precisely, it might raise the question of whether hearing such words on broadcast radio and television is harmful to minors, even in light of the opportunities for minors to hear such words elsewhere. If the government failed to prove that hearing certain words on broadcast radio or television is harmful to minors, then a court would not find a compelling interest in censoring those words and might strike down the law.

It might still uphold the law, however, if it found that the law served the government’s interest “in supporting ‘parents’ claim to authority in their own household,” and that this is a compelling interest independent from the interest in protecting the well-being of minors. In Ginsberg v. New York, the Court referred to the state’s interest in the well-being of its youth as “independent” from its interest in supporting “parents’ claim to authority in their own household to direct the rearing of their children.”¹⁴⁰ The holding in Ginsberg, however, did not turn on whether these interests are independent, and one might argue that they are not, because the government’s interest in supporting parents lies in assisting them in protecting their children from harmful influences. If “indecent” words are not a harmful influence, then, arguably, the government has no interest, sufficient to override the First Amendment, in supporting parents in their efforts to prevent their children’s access to them. It has also been argued that “a law that effectively bans all indecent programming . . . does not facilitate parental supervision. In my view, my right as a parent has been preempted, not facilitated, if I am told that certain programming will be banned from my . . . television. Congress cannot take away my right to decide what my children watch, absent some showing that my children are in fact at risk of harm from exposure to indecent programming.”¹⁴¹

If the government could persuade a court that a ban, during certain hours, on the broadcast of “indecent” words regardless of context serves a compelling interest — either in protecting the well-being of minors or in supporting parents’ claim to authority — the government would then have to prove that the ban was the least restrictive means to advance that interest. This might raise questions such as whether it is necessary to prohibit particular words on weekdays during school hours, solely to protect pre-school children and children who are home sick some days. In response to this question, the government could note that the broadcast in Pacifica was at 2 p.m. on a Tuesday, but was nevertheless considered a “time[] of the day when there is a reasonable risk that children may be in the audience.”¹⁴² More significantly, however, a court might find a ban too restrictive because it would prohibit the broadcast, between certain hours, of material, including works of art and other material with serious value, that would not attract substantial numbers of youthful viewers or listeners.

¹⁴⁰ Ginsberg, supra, 390 at 640, 639. See also, Action for Children’s Television v. FCC, supra, 58 F.3d at 661.

¹⁴¹ Action for Children’s Television v. FCC, supra, 58 F.3d at 670 (emphasis in original) (Edwards, C.J., dissenting).

¹⁴² Pacifica, supra, 438 U.S. at 732.

In conclusion, it appears that, if a court were to apply strict scrutiny to determine the constitutionality of a ban on the broadcast of “indecent” language regardless of context, then it might require the government to “demonstrate that the recited harms are real, not merely conjectural, and that the regulation will in fact alleviate these harms in a direct and material way.” This would mean that the government would have to demonstrate a compelling governmental interest, such as that hearing “indecent” words on broadcast radio and television is harmful to minors, despite the likelihood that minors hear such words elsewhere, or that banning “indecent” words is necessary to support parents’ authority in their own household. If the government could not demonstrate a compelling governmental interest, then the court might find the ban unconstitutional. Even if the government could demonstrate a compelling interest, a court might find the ban unconstitutional if it applied to material with serious value, at least if such material would not attract substantial numbers of youthful viewers or listeners.

Whether a court would apply strict scrutiny would depend upon whether, in light of the proliferation of cable television, it finds Pacifica to remain applicable to broadcast media. If a court does find that Pacifica remains applicable to broadcast media, then the court would be faced with questions that Pacifica did not decide: whether, on broadcast radio and television during hours when children are likely to be in the audience, the government may prohibit an “indecent” word used as an occasional expletive, or in material that would not attract substantial numbers of youthful viewers or listeners.

Second Circuit’s dicta in Fox Television Stations, Inc. v. FCC. As noted at pages 16-18 of this report, on June 4, 2007, the Second Circuit, in a 2-1 decision, found “that the FCC’s new policy regarding ‘fleeting expletives’ represents a significant departure from positions previously taken by the agency and relied on by the broadcast industry. We further find that the FCC has failed to articulate a reasoned basis for this change in policy. Accordingly, we hold that the FCC’s new policy regarding ‘fleeting expletives’ is arbitrary and capricious under the Administrative Procedure Act.”¹⁴³ As also noted above, the Second Circuit, having overturned the FCC policy on statutory grounds, had no occasion to decide whether it also violated the First Amendment. In dicta, however, it explained why it was “skeptical that the Commission can provide a reasonable explanation for its ‘fleeting expletive’ regime that would pass constitutional muster.”

The court wrote that it was sympathetic to the Networks’ contention that the FCC’s indecency test is undefined, indiscernible, inconsistent, and consequently, unconstitutionally vague. . . . We also note that the FCC’s indecency test raises the separate constitutional question of whether it permits the FCC to sanction speech based on its subjective view of the merit of that speech. It appears that under the FCC's current indecency regime, any and all uses of an expletive is presumptively indecent and profane with the broadcaster then having to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Commission, under an unidentified burden of proof, that the expletives were "integral" to the work. In the licensing context, the Supreme Court has cautioned against speech regulations that give too much discretion to government officials. . . . Finally, we recognize that there is some tension in the law regarding the appropriate level of First Amendment scrutiny. In general, restrictions on First Amendment liberties prompt courts to apply strict scrutiny. . . . At the same time, however, the Supreme Court has also considered broadcast media exceptional. . . . Nevertheless, we would be remiss not to observe that it is increasingly difficult to describe the broadcast media as uniquely pervasive and uniquely accessible to children, and at some point in the future, strict scrutiny may properly apply in the context of regulating broadcast television.¹⁴⁴

¹⁴³ Fox Television Stations, supra note 98, 489 F.3d at 447.

¹⁴⁴ Id. at 463-465.