His Companion, Ayres, Has Narrow Escape, But Finally Saves Himself.

The body of William F. Hubbard, assistant. Forest Service of the Depart-ment of Agriculture, who lived at 1122 Sixteenth street northwest, has been in the Potomac river more than twentyfour hours. Authorities of Maryland, who have been dragging for it, reported that it had not been struck or caught by the grappling irons.

Lieutenant Sutton, of the Harbor pre cinct, was asked to send the police boat Vigilant, to the scene of the drowning. Owing to the shallowness of the water near Great Falls, where the tragedy occurred, and the nature of the bottom, he could not comply with the request.

Canoe Upsets.

Mr. Hubbard was returning to Washington from Harpers Ferry, W. va., esterday morning about 8:30 o'clock, in a canoe with a friend when the boat capsized. He was thrown into the water It is believed that when he fell his mouth filled with water and he was strangled. This would have made it impossible for him to save himself. Robert W. Ayres, the young man who was in the small frail craft with Mr. Hubbard, had a narrow escape from death. It is due to the fact that he struck a rock in the river when almost exhausted that he is living today

When Mr. Hubbard left the office on Saturday afternoon, he and Mr. Ayres went to Harpers Ferry. They intended returning to Washington in a canoe loaned them by Horace W. Chittenden.

The two started from Harpers Ferry on Sunday morning, and proceeded without accident or incident to a point opposite the mouth of Difficult creek, about a mile and a half this side of Great At this point there is a strong condition of Col. Hubbard had spent much into on the water, and was not frightened by being thrown into the water. He shouted to Ayres to cling on to one side of the boat while he held on to the other, and said they would soon have the boat setting right in the water.

Mr. Hubbard, who weighs about 180 pounds, is believed to have been too heavy to balance his companion. He went down shortly after catching hold of the boat. The water rushed into his mouth, and either excited or strangled him so that he could not save himself. He was drowned without coming to the surface the customary three times.

Mr. Ayres held on like grim death to his end of the boat, and was carried down the river for three or four hundred yards. The boat was then carried by the current toward the left. There he struck a rock on which he scrambled.

The friends went to the scene of the drowning and assisted in the scarch for the body. At nightfall they returned to the city, leaving Dick Walker, a riverman, to continue dragging for the body. Several friends obtained leave at the department this morning and went to the spartment this morning and went to the spartment this morning and went to the several strokes toward the shore, but could not be positive of this. Even if the Hubbard did do this it is not believed he could have saved himself, because of the treacherous eddies and whirlpools which abound at that point in the river.

Mr. Hubbard was educated in Germany, taking a doctor's degree at the University of Tuebingen in Wurtemberg. He was twenty-eight years old and unmarried.
