

Please change the seat belt size requirement to one more realistic considering the size of America's population. Although I can fasten most seat belts, they are all uncomfortably tight and cross my neck instead of my shoulders and chest. Because they cross too high, I really believe they are more of a danger than a help since I would either strangle or have my neck broken in an accident. I wear them because Oregon has mandatory seat belts but cannot lean forward at all. They are incredibly uncomfortable.

Some cars seat belts do not fit, however. Honda's never fit. They don't even come close. It's unfair to have mandatory seat belt laws if they seat belts don't fit. It's not even a catch-22, since I cannot comply with the law.
