

The everlasting struggle between security and liberty is one the national government will wrestle with the rest of the existence of the country. I believe that the intention of this bill is security for the citizens, but does it go too far? I believe so.

A now irrelevant statesmen named Thomas Jefferson once said "for a people who are free, and who mean to remain so, a well-organized and armed militia is their best security." Rest assured if this is passed and implemented I can personally guarantee I will renounce my citizenship to the United States of America and become an Irish citizen, as it is my birthright to do so.

Please do not seriously consider this, because if it is passed you'll definitely be losing a citizen.
