SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Papers of Dennis A. FitzGerald, agricultural economist and marketing specialist, food consultant, United States Government official, and research scholar with Brookings Institution, span the period from 1940 to 1969 but the bulk of the collection falls into the years from 1951 to 1966.

Dennis Alfred FitzGerald was born on January 1, 1903 in Grenfell, Saskatchewan, Canada. After attending various grade schools in Saskatchewan and British Columbia FitzGerald graduated from Grenfell High School in 1919. He received his bachelor's degree from the University of Saskatchewan in 1924 before coming to the United States and receiving a Master's Degree from Iowa State College of Agriculture in 1925. For the next few years FitzGerald remained on the staff at Iowa State College as an agricultural economist and marketing specialist. He married Ina E. Burns in 1928 and in 1932 he took time off to work on his doctorate at Harvard University.

At Harvard FitzGerald participated in a Brookings Institution sponsored study of agriculture during the New Deal, (he would have more contacts with Brookings in the future), and three years after becoming a naturalized citizen in 1935, FitzGerald received his Ph.D. from Harvard University.

FitzGerald began his service with the United States Government in 1935 when he became head of the Economic and Research Section, North Central Division, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U.S. Department of Agriculture. For the next several years FitzGerald held many positions within the Department of Agriculture and gained administrative experience plus exposure to the problems of food distribution in a war ravaged world. In 1946 he accompanied former President Herbert Hoover on a world trip to survey the food situation in various countries. Upon his return, FitzGerald served for the next couple of years as Secretary General, International Emergency Food Council, a United Nations agency composed of representatives of 32 countries interested in dealing with worldwide food shortages during the years following World War II.

In 1948 the United States began implementing a massive program of economic assistance to Europe in order to support European recovery from the losses of World War II. This program, popularly known as the Marshall Plan, impacted significantly on Dennis FitzGerald's career. Paul Hoffman, Director of the Economic Cooperation Administration, the agency established to administer Marshall Plan programs, asked FitzGerald to help organize the Agricultural Division of the Economic Cooperation Administration. Thus began FitzGerald's 16 year career as an administrator of United States Government foreign assistance programs.

Over the years the name of the agency responsible for these programs changed from Economic Cooperation Administration to the Mutual Security Administration; then it became the Foreign Operations Administration followed by the International Cooperation Administration until finally, in 1961 the Kennedy Administration established the Agency For International Development which currently administers foreign economic assistance programs. FitzGerald served in important positions through all of these changes in agency name and presidential administrations until the fall of 1961 when he was removed by Fowler Hamilton, President Kennedy's first head of the Agency for International Development. During these years FitzGerald was primarily an administrator who from 1955 on had the operational responsibility of his agency. In this capacity he exercised broad supervision of United States overseas missions and instructed each mission to submit draft programs for each fiscal year. He provided continuity within an agency characterized by frequent changes at the top level. Although a professionally trained agricultural economist with years of administrative experience with foreign aid programs, FitzGerald was also a political appointee and thus subject to the fate of holdover political appointees who are normally replaced by an incoming presidential administration wanting to pick its own people to carry out its policies and programs.

While he was shuffled out of his position as Deputy Director of Operations after the creation of the new Agency for International Development in 1961, FitzGerald retained his connections with the Agency as a consultant to Fowler Hamilton until December, 1962. Meanwhile, in September 1962 he joined the Senior Staff of Brookings Institution as a research scholar and remained at Brookings until 1966. While at Brookings FitzGerald conducted research on issues involving foreign economic assistance, participated in Council on Foreign Relations discussions and in the spring of 1963 served as a consultant for the United Nations Special Fund which provided development assistance to Indonesia. In July 1966 FitzGerald became Vice President of Checci and Company in Washington, DC. He retired in June 1972 and moved to Tarpon Springs, Florida. On September 15, 1994 FitzGerald died in Tarpon Springs at the age of 91.

In summary, Dennis A. FitzGerald was a professional agricultural economist whose knowledge of food distribution gave him the opportunity to serve the United States Government in many capacities. He assisted Herbert Hoover in surveying economic conditions in 38 countries and reported to Secretary of War James Forrestal on the food situation in Germany. After working for the International Emergency Food Council, FitzGerald was one of the first people selected by Paul Hoffman to start the Marshall Plan programs. As a top administrator in the United States Government's agency responsible for foreign aid, FitzGerald contributed continuity, experience and a practical approach in developing assistance programs. He insisted that money and other assistance be provided countries only if they needed it and then, be spent for economically sound projects and not merely to maintain "good" relations with various countries. He criticized the Department of State for spending money for foreign relations purposes without having economic justification for doing so. He thought that countries' wants often differed from their needs and that less developed countries needed to work on basic education and agricultural development. Such countries should not be deluded by the lures of "instant modernization."

The Papers of Dennis A. FitzGerald are organized into ten series and consist of approximately 40,000 pages. The papers contain little information on FitzGerald's personal life or on his activities prior to 1946 and after 1968. There are gaps in the record of his official career as well. For example, FitzGerald's role in the early days of the Marshall Plan (1948-50) is covered primarily in his file of public statements and news clippings and the chronological reading file spanning the period from 1951 to 1961 is missing a few folders. Nevertheless, this detailed series of memoranda along with the extensive file of memoranda of telephone conversations covering the period from 1951-1961 provide a record of the daily "nuts and bolts" operations of the United States Government's foreign assistance programs. The small but significant file of materials covering his famine relief activities during the post-World War II period should be useful to anyone studying European recovery and its background during these years. FitzGerald's collection of radio broadcast and press conference transcripts, speeches, newsclippings, and his memoranda on foreign assistance program organization should be examined by anyone researching the Marshall Plan. Finally, the numerous studies, reports, Council on Foreign Relations study group memoranda, official Agency for International Development documents and the extensive file of publications along with the telephone call memoranda and the chronological reading file make the Dennis A. FitzGerald Papers a useful source for the study of the theory and practice of foreign economic assistance.

Series I, the Truman Administration Series, is small (about 825 pages), but contains official information on international famine relief. Much of this series pertains to FitzGerald's work as Secretary-General, International Emergency Food Council. Also found here is his memorandum to the Secretary of War reporting on the food situation in Germany in 1947 and material on the Truman Administration's Cabinet Committee on World Food Programs. Material concerning FitzGerald's work as food consultant to Herbert Hoover during Hoover's famine relief mission in 1946-47 is found in Series III, Kennedy Administration. This file consists of copies of documents which Hoover requested from FitzGerald in May, 1961 for use in writing a book.

Series II, the Eisenhower Administration Series, contains about 415 pages including a report on agricultural surplus disposal, Council on Foreign Relations Study Group Reports on United States foreign economic policy, Hoover Commission reports on United States Overseas economic operations plus International Cooperation Administration comments, a paper by Max Millikan and Walt Rostow proposing a new foreign economic policy for the United States, a file of ICA personnel efficiency reports, and a small quantity of personal and official correspondence. Little information on the formulation of policy within the International Cooperation Administration is found in this series.

Series III, the Kennedy Administration Series, consists of about 1,400 pages which cover primarily the period from 1961-62 when FitzGerald was still Deputy Director For Operations, ICA, and in late 1962 when he was a consultant to the Director of the Agency For International Development, Fowler Hamilton. During 1961 the Kennedy Administration reorganized the International Cooperation Administration and consolidated it with other U.S. Government foreign assistance functions to form the Agency For International Development. This series contains reports, memoranda and studies pertaining to this reorganization. Also found here are numerous AID documents containing statistical data and other information concerning programs. Of unique interest here is the previously mentioned file of material requested by Herbert Hoover for a book on famine relief.

Series IV, the AID Subject Series, consists of approximately 3,200 pages and spans the period 1961-69 with most of the material falling into the years 1963-68. During much of this time FitzGerald was a research scholar employed by Brookings Institution with 60 days taken off in 1963 to work as a consultant for a United Nation Special Fund project for Indonesia. After July 1966, FitzGerald was Vice President of Checchi and Company but virtually nothing on this company is found in the series. Documentation concerning Brookings Institution and the Agency For International Development are mixed together in this series which appears to reflect FitzGerald's intertwined relations with Brookings and with AID. FitzGerald's work with the UN Special Fund is covered by reports, notes, and studies concerning Indonesia, some of which were still security-classified when these papers were processed. Other types of materials include correspondence, memoranda, reports, studies, speeches, and printed matter concerning Brookings Institution, the Agency For International Development, and the Council on Foreign Relations.

Series V, the AID Financial Reports Series, consists of 1,670 pages of AID/ICA Flash Reports and Executive Reports containing detailed financial data on ICA/AID obligations by country and program per fiscal year from 1959 to 1964.

Series VI, the Publications Series, consists of an estimated 8,800 pages of printed publications covering the years from 1947-1969. These publications are arranged alphabetically by title and include official documents produced by the Economic Cooperation Administration, the Foreign Operations Administration, the International Cooperation Administration, and the Agency For International Development as well as by private organizations. These reports contain narrative as well as statistics and tables and cover a range of foreign aid related topics including agriculture, legislation, loan agreements, programs, food for peace, aid to Free China, United Nations peacekeeping in the Congo and other topics.

Series VII, the Telephone Calls Series, consists of approximately 13,200 pages of single-spaced typed memoranda of telephone conversations in Dennis FitzGerald's office. These span the years 1951 to 1961 and document in detail his discussions of personnel, legislation, issues, and countries. The number of topics covered is too large to list comprehensively here but the shelf list for this series is extensively subject annotated and should be checked carefully by anyone interested in United States foreign economic assistance programs or relations with individual countries. These memoranda are packed with technical and sometimes cryptic data but do contain nuggets of information on a variety of issues for those willing to dig for them. P.L. 480 is a frequent topic as are congressional hearings and appropriations, personnel, and such recipients of United States aid as Bolivia, Chile, Korea, Latin America, Egypt and the Aswan Dam, Southeast Asia including Laos and Vietnam, Spain, and other countries and regions. Information can also be found here on the European Recovery Program of the Truman years, personalities and policies of the Eisenhower Administration such as Douglas Dillon and Harold Stassen, and the Kennedy Administration's New Frontier programs including the Peace Corps, George McGovern and Food For Peace, and aid to Latin America and Southeast Asia.

Series VIII, the Proposed Legislation Series, contains approximately 1,600 pages of Congressional committee prints and reports on Congressional hearings on P.L. 480, and other foreign aid legislation. This printed material covers the period from 1954 to 1966.

Series IX, the DAF Reading File is part of the accretion received by the Library in November 1994. It consists of approximately 5,500 pages of memoranda and memoranda of conversations documenting foreign economic assistance programs from 1951 to 1961. Information on foreign aid transactions involving numerous countries can be found in this series with certain countries including Bolivia, Indochina, Iran, Japan, Korea, Spain and Yugoslavia being the subject of numerous memoranda. A few items here can be found concerning Guatemala in June 1954 and Iran in 1953. Also documented here are inter-agency relations, relations with Congress, budgetary matters, administrative and operational aspects of PL 480 and other foreign assistance programs, food and agriculture in general, and personnel matters. It should be examined in conjunction with Series VII, Telephone Calls which cover the same kinds of topics for the same time period.

Series X, Foreign Economic Assistance, also part of the November 1994 accretion, is comprised of approximately 5,000 pages of memoranda, messages, reports, newsclippings, transcripts of radio broadcasts, articles, and memoranda of telephone conversations. Although it contains one 1940 item and a few newsclippings dated 1943-45 the bulk of this series spans the period 1946-66. This series is an important source of information on the organization and administration of U.S. government foreign assistance programs from 1948-1961. It also documents in detail agricultural assistance (PL-480) and in Dennis FitzGerald's speeches and broadcasts, the early days of the Marshall Plan. Of particular note here is a lengthy report on the Herbert Hoover world trip in 1946 to survey food conditions. The report, prepared by a participant in the mission, contains personal observations on social, economic and political conditions and some personalities. The last segment of this series consists of draft narratives with some statistical data, recording the history of U.S. foreign aid programs with sections devoted to various subtopics including loans, administrations, relations with governments, and congressional legislation. The file of telephone conversations with Harold Stassen, 1953-54, document interactions between Harold Stassen as Director of Foreign Operations Administration and Dennis FitzGerald. A few items here pertain to Guatemala in 1954.

While portions of the FitzGerald Papers were arranged in established series when the collection came to the Eisenhower Library, staff archivists arranged certain materials to reflect their relationship to FitzGerald's specific positions. The collection contains newsclippings and other deteriorating materials subject to preservation work. When the collection was processed, including the 1994 accretion, over 1200 pages were declassified onsite with the application of agency guidelines by the archives staff while 226 pages were withdrawn because they are security-classified or contain intelligence material or other national security-information. These items have been placed in the Library's security vault and are covered by the mandatory declassification review provisions of Executive Order 12356. Four hundred fifty six pages were closed in accordance with the donor's deed of gift. Most of this material pertains to personnel matters and is withheld for personal privacy reasons.

Additional information on Dr. Dennis A. FitzGerald can be found in the transcript of an oral history interview conducted with Dr. FitzGerald by a Library staff archivist in 1976. Documentation concerning the United States Government's foreign economic assistance programs can be found in many other collections in the Eisenhower Library's holdings. Additional information may also be found in the personal papers of John Ohly, Deputy Director for Programs and Planning within the International Cooperation Administration during the late 1950s. The Ohly Papers are deposited in the Harry S. Truman Library, Independence, Missouri. The Records of the Agency for International Development are in the National Archives in Washington, D.C.
