Dear FCC:

Thank you for taking the time to read this letter, I'll keep it brief. There are millions (literally) of people who enjoy their satellite radio and would love to have even more options of stations to listen to. But neither of these companies (XM and Sirius) are making a profit, and so as separate companies they might end up dying out. They have a chance to merge and become one better company that can make a profit, and I am for that. The customers get more choices and better quality radio, and the companies get what all companies want, cash. Some people believe that this merger would create a monopoly...but by what definition? Do they really believe that these are the only two companies that are competing against each other? I hope that these people are just ill-informed. People do not think, "What satellite radio should I get for my car?" But instead think, "Should I get satellite radio, or an iPod, or HD radio, etc." These choices represent the market, and in no way would Sirius and XM together be a monopoly. Though the merger might make them a company that can compete with these other audio entertainment companies and create an improved product that customers will enjoy.

Anyway, thanks for reading my little blurb about my thoughts on the proposed merger.

Happy Holidays and Happy New Year,

Turner Monroe
