I disagree with the plan to require warning labels on vitamins advising consumers to seek medical advice before taking the products. This may have the effect of deterring people from obtaining the many benefits of vitamins. It is a needless and wasteful policy, with potentially harmful effects. There are many food components and additives which are known to be harmful to people (e.g. raise the risks of heart disease, diabetes, cancer) which are subject to no warnings. Please do not move forward to implement this policy.
