Additional Data:

All buildings are practically in ruins. The fort was located in a flat area at the bottom of the foot hills of the Davis Mountains. The plan of the fort was rectangular, with the commanding officers' quarters and the officers quarters facing east onto the parade grounds, the barracks, mess halls, etc. of the enlisted men facing west onto the parade and drill grounds. The Quartermasters' warehouse and corrals were located east of the enlisted men's barracks; the chapel was located at the north end of the quadrangle. The hospital was located west of the officers' quarters. The south end of the quadrangle was open.

General Twiggs ordered the fort turned over to Confederate Texas Commissioners in April 1861. The garrison evacuated and marched for San Antonio, but was captured nine miles from San Antonio on Adams Hill by General Van Dorn, C.S.A. Immediately upon evacuation of the post by U.S. troops, it was occupied by Col. Baylor's Texas troops, who remained until the large amount of stores left by the 8th Infantry was consumed. They evacuated; the fort was then occupied by roving Mexicans and Indian bands, resulting in considerable destruction. The post was reoccupied by U.S. troops July 1st, 1867, and the existing structures were then built.
