QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether a party who would have been entitled to commence a timely action under 26 U.S.C. 7426 to challenge an allegedly wrongful Internal Revenue Service levy upon its property to collect taxes owed by another, but failed to commence such an action within the applicable limitations period, may seek a refund of the amount collected by the levy through a tax-refund action under 28 U.S.C. 1346(a)(1).

EC TERM OF YEARS TRUST, PETITIONER

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (Pet. App. 1a-7a) is reported at 434 F.3d 807. The opinion of the district court (Pet. App. 8a-18a) is not published in the Federal Supplement, but is available at 2004 WL 911307.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on January 3, 2006. A petition for rehearing was denied on March 2, 2006 (Pet. App. 19a). The petition for certiorari was filed on May 31, 2006. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

STATEMENT

1. Petitioner is one of several trusts created by Elmer and Dorothy Cullers. In 1999, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) contended that the Cullers had transferred property to the trusts to avoid paying their federal income taxes, and the IRS filed tax liens against the trusts for income taxes that the IRS had assessed against the Cullers for tax years 1981 through 1984. Although petitioner and the other trusts disagreed with the IRS's contentions, in August 1999, they opened a bank account for the purpose of satisfying the Cullers's tax deficiency. The IRS then levied on the account, and the bank issued a check on October 5, 1999, to satisfy the levy. Pet. App. 2a; BSC Term of Years Trust v. United States, No. EP-00-CA-270-H, 2000 WL 33155870, at *2-*3 (W.D. Tex. Dec. 28, 2000).

Almost one year later, on September 7, 2000, petitioner (and others) filed an action against the United States pursuant to 26 U.S.C. 7426, which authorizes an action to challenge a wrongful levy, and 28 U.S.C. 1346(a)(1), which authorizes an action to recover erroneously collected taxes. See Pet. App. 2a, 9a. The district court dismissed the wrongful-levy claim, concluding that it was time-barred because it was not filed within nine months after the challenged levy, as required by 26 U.S.C. 6532(c)(1), and that petitioner had not made a proper request for return of the property that could have extended that nine-month limitation pursuant to the terms of 26 U.S.C. 6532(c)(2). BSC Term of Years Trust, 2000 WL 33155870, at *2-*3. In addition, the district court held that it lacked jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1346(a)(1) because 26 U.S.C. 7426 "affords the exclusive remedy for an innocent third party whose property is confiscated by the IRS to satisfy another person's tax liability." 2000 WL 33155870, at *2 n.1 (quoting Texas Commerce Bank Fort Worth, N.A. v. United States, 896 F.2d 152, 156 (5th Cir. 1990)); see Pet. App. 3a n.3.¹

Petitioner and the other trusts voluntarily dismissed their appeal from the district court's decision. See BSC Term of Years Trust v. United States, No. 01-50127, 2001 WL 722022 (5th Cir. Apr. 25, 2001).

2. On September 6, 2001, petitioner filed an administrative claim for refund of the amount that the IRS had collected by levy. Pet. App. 9a. After the claim was denied, petitioner filed this second action, alleging jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1346(a)(1). Pet. App. 9a.² The district court dismissed the complaint on the ground that a wrongful-levy action under 26 U.S.C. 7426 is the "exclusive remedy for those in [petitioner's] circumstances." Pet. App. 17a. The district court rejected petitioner's claim that the decision in United States v. Williams, 514 U.S. 527 (1995), overruled the "longstanding exclusivity rule" with respect to wrongful-levy claims. Pet. App. 17a. In Williams, this Court held that a party "who paid a tax under protest to remove a lien on her property, ha[d] standing to bring a refund action under 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1), even though the tax she paid was assessed against a third party," where she had "no realistic alternative to payment of a tax she did not owe" and would otherwise have been left "without a remedy." 514 U.S. at 529. The district court distinguished Williams from the facts of this case, where petitioner could have availed itself of the wrongful-levy remedy, but failed to bring a timely claim. Pet. App. 17a. The court declined to read Williams as holding that "third-parties, under ordinary circumstances, are no longer required to bring a wrongful levy action as such would create instability in federal government property resolutions inherent in the shortened statute of limitation applicable to such claims." Ibid.

² The district court denied the government's motion to dismiss the second action on "res judicata" grounds, which the court understood to be an argument based upon claim preclusion rather than issue preclusion. EC Term of Years Trust v. United States, No. EP-03-CA-363 (KC), 2004 WL 911307, at *2 & n.1 (W.D. Tex. Apr. 23, 2004). The court concluded that the earlier dismissal of petitioner's Section 1346 claim "would not be considered" as a disposition "on the merits for res judicata purposes" and could not receive "more deference than that given a dismissal on subject matter jurisdiction" grounds. Id. at *3. Accordingly, the court declined to give preclusive effect to the prior disposition of the Section 1346 claim. The government raised both claim and issue preclusion on appeal (Gov't C.A. Br. 37-44), but the court of appeals did not address either argument. The government does not press either preclusion theory in this Court.

3. The court of appeals affirmed. Pet. App. 1a-7a. The court of appeals noted its prior decisions holding "that if § 7426 is available to an individual, then it is his sole and exclusive remedy," and it observed that the "short statute of limitations governing claims under § 7426 allows for the expeditious resolution of tax liability." Id. at 4a. The court concluded that Williams should not be read to suggest "that a refund action under § 1346 is available in addition to a wrongful levy action under § 7426." Id. at 5a. The court further observed that "to allow an alternative remedy under § 1346, with its longer statute of limitations period, see 26 U.S.C. §§ 6511(a), 6532(a)(1), would undermine the surety provided by the clear avenue to recovery under § 7426." Ibid.

ARGUMENT

The court of appeals correctly held that the wrongful-levy provisions of 26 U.S.C. 7426, as restricted by the applicable statute of limitations (26 U.S.C. 6532(c)), afforded the exclusive remedy available to petitioner to assert its claim, and that petitioner could not circumvent the limitations period applicable to such actions by pursuing a tax-refund suit under 28 U.S.C. 1346(a)(1). The United States agrees with petitioner, however, that this case presents a recurring question of substantial administrative importance on which there is a direct conflict among the courts of appeals. Review by this Court would therefore be appropriate.

1. a. The United States cannot be sued unless Congress has waived the government's sovereign immunity, and such waivers are strictly construed. United States v. Nordic Vill., Inc., 503 U.S. 30, 33, 34, 37 (1992); United States v. Dalm, 494 U.S. 596, 608 (1990); Library of Congress v. Shaw, 478 U.S. 310, 318 (1986). Terms and conditions that Congress attaches to the legislative waiver of sovereign immunity are also strictly construed. Block v. North Dakota, 461 U.S. 273, 287 (1983). "A statute of limitations requiring that a suit against the government be brought within a certain time period is one of those terms." Dalm, 494 U.S. at 608; Block, 461 U.S. at 287. Moreover, the terms of the government's "consent to be sued in any court define that court's jurisdiction to entertain the suit." Dalm, 494 U.S. at 608 (United States v. Testan, 424 U.S. 392, 399 (1976) (quoting United States v. Sherwood, 312 U.S. 584, 586 (1941))). Thus, when a party fails to commence a suit against the United States within the limitations period, the government has not waived its sovereign immunity, and the courts lack jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Id. at 608-610. Furthermore, even though Congress has provided one statute of limitations for a general class of actions, it nevertheless can "provide less liberally for particular actions which, because of special considerations, require[] different treatment." United States v. A.S. Kreider Co., 313 U.S. 443, 447 (1941) (rejecting taxpayer's reliance in a tax-refund action on a general sixyear statute of limitations for suits against the United States).

Congress has done precisely that with respect to wrongful-levy actions under 26 U.S.C. 7426. Section 7426 waives the government's immunity with respect to wrongful-levy actions brought against the United States by "any person (other than the person against whom is assessed the tax out of which such levy arose) who claims an interest in or lien on such property." 26 U.S.C. 7426(a)(1). A wrongful-levy action may be brought "without regard to whether such property has been surrendered to or sold" by the IRS. Ibid. Such actions are restricted, however, by Section 6532(c), which provides that "no suit or proceeding under section 7426 shall be begun after the expiration of 9 months from the date of the levy." 26 U.S.C. 6532(c)(1); see 26 U.S.C. 6532(c)(2) (extending that limitation under certain circumstances). Courts have recognized that the enactment of this relatively short limitations period accommodates the need of the government to resolve expeditiously collection issues affecting a taxpayer's account. See, e.g., United Sand & Gravel Contractors, Inc. v. United States, 624 F.2d 733, 739 (5th Cir. 1980) ("[Section] 6532(c) protects the legitimate interest of the United States in requiring other claimants of the seized property to bring their claims quickly."); Gordon v. United States, 649 F.2d 837, 843 (Ct. Cl. 1981) ("Congress was clearly concerned that levy contests more than 9 months after the levy would prevent ultimate collection of the tax, thereby endangering the federal treasury.").

Given this restriction on wrongful-levy actions, courts have long rejected claims, including refund claims, by property owners who were subject to an IRS levy to collect another's taxes, but who failed to challenge the levy within the limitations period provided by 26 U.S.C. 6532(c). See, e.g., Miller v. Tony & Susan Alamo Found., 134 F.3d 910, 916-917 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding that, where Section 7426(a)(1) applies, quiet title actions under 26 U.S.C. 2410 are "foreclosed"); Dahn v. United States. 127 F.3d 1249, 1253 (10th Cir. 1997) (rejecting "attempt to circumvent the § 7426/ § 6532 time-bar" by invoking other "remedial sources," including Section 1346(a)(1);³ Williams v. United States, 947 F.2d 37, 39 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding that the "two-year period set forth in section 6532(a)(1)for a refund of taxes does not apply" and that a wrongful-levy action is the "sole remedy available to an individual * * * who claims an interest in property that has been levied upon by the IRS for the purpose of satisfying the tax liability of another person"), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 942 (1992); United Sand, 624 F.2d at 738-739 (rejecting quiet-title claim brought by property owner under 28 U.S.C. 2410 more than nine months after a challenged levy on the ground that his "exclusive remedy" was a wrongful-levy action under Section 7426); see also Gordon, 649 F.2d at 843-844 (holding that the statute of limitations for wrongful-levy actions applies to challenges to third-party levy actions brought under the jurisdiction of the Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. 1491).⁴ The decision below is in accord with this substantial line of precedent, and the court of appeals followed its "prior holdings that when § 7426 is available to an individual, then it is his sole and exclusive remedy." Pet. App. 6a- $7a.^{5}$

b. The court of appeals correctly rejected petitioner's contention that this Court's decision in United States v. Williams, 514 U.S. 527 (1995), altered this longstanding rule. In that case, the Court held that Williams, who had paid under protest a tax that the IRS had assessed against a third party, had standing to bring a refund action under 28 U.S.C. 1346(a)(1). In so holding, the Court noted that none of the remedies that are potentially available to a party when the IRS seizes assets to satisfy the tax liability of another was "realistically open to Williams." 514 U.S. at 536. In particular, the Court observed that she could not have filed a wrongfullevy action under Section 7426, because the collection measure at issue was a tax lien rather than a levy. Ibid. Thus, emphasizing that Williams was otherwise "without a remedy," the Court concluded that "Congress did not intend refund actions under § 1346(a)(1) to be unavailable to persons situated as Lori Williams is." Ibid.⁶

As the court of appeals here concluded, Williams does not "allow litigants who could bring suit under § 7426 also to bring suit under § 1346." Pet. App. 5a. Contrary to petitioner's contention (Pet. 10-11), the fact that the Williams opinion noted the "evident breadth of § 1346(a)(1)" does not mean that the Court "implicitly determined that 26 U.S.C. § 7426 does not provide the exclusive remedy" to a party, like petitioner, whose situation falls squarely within the scope of Section 7426. As the Tenth Circuit explained in Dahn, the Williams Court "was concerned solely with the reach of § 1346 per se; the exclusivity of a concurrent § 7426 claim was never in issue." 127 F.3d at 1253.

Nothing in Williams calls into question the long line of authorities recognizing the need for a speedy resolution of property disputes where the IRS levies on a party's property for the collection of another's unpaid Despite the general language of Section taxes. 1346(a)(1), Congress "provid[ed] less liberally" for parties whose property has been subjected to such a levy because of "special considerations, requir[ing] different treatment." A.S. Kreider Co., 313 U.S. at 447; see, e.g., United Sand, 624 F.2d at 738. As the court below and the Tenth Circuit have recognized. Williams did not "overturn, sub silentio, the separate and well-established principle that § 7426 provides the exclusive remedy for a wrongful levy." Dahn, 127 F.3d at 1253; accord Pet. App. 5a-6a.⁷

2. As petitioner notes (Pet. 4-5), the Ninth Circuit's decision in WWSM Investors v. United States, 64 F.3d 456 (9th Cir. 1995), directly conflicts with the decision in this case. WWSM Investors also conflicts with the Tenth Circuit's decision in Dahn, 127 F.3d 1249.

In WWSM Investors, a third party subject to levy filed an untimely wrongful-levy action, and then moved for leave to amend the complaint to include a claim for a tax-refund under 28 U.S.C. 1346(a)(1). Although the Ninth Circuit held that the Section 7426 claim was timebarred, it held that WWSM Investors "may file suit for a refund under 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1)." 64 F.3d at 459. The Ninth Circuit believed that this Court's decision in Williams "control[led]" the case because it viewed the levy in WWSM Investors as "functionally equivalent" to Williams's payment to discharge the lien in Williams. Ibid. As the dissent in WWSM Investors correctly observed, however, this Court's decision in Williams "recognized that Williams could not use the remedy of 26 U.S.C. § 7426 because there was no levy" and "did not allow that a non-levy remedy under 1346(a)(1) was available when the exclusive levy remedy under § 7426 was barred by the statute of limitations." Id. at 459-460 (Brunetti, J., dissenting).

WWSM Investors was decided shortly after this Court's decision in Williams.⁸ No other court of appeals has followed the Ninth Circuit in reading Williams to open federal courts to tax-refund suits by parties who could have brought a timely wrongful-levy action but failed to do so. To the contrary, both the Fifth Circuit in this case and the Tenth Circuit in Dahn have noted, but have declined to follow, the Ninth Circuit's approach. Pet. App. 6a; Dahn, 127 F.3d at 1253 & n.2. Moreover, apart from refund actions, courts of appeals (including the Ninth Circuit) have continued to reject attempts to circumvent the limitations period on wrongful-levy actions through the use of other types of claims. See Audio Invs. v. Robertson, 67 Fed. Appx. 795, 797 (4th Cir. 2003) (per curiam) (rejecting a quiet-title action); Miller v. Tony & Susan Alamo Found., 134 F.3d 910, 916 (8th Cir. 1998) (rejecting garnishment action); Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. City of Adelanto, 87 F.3d 334, 335 (9th Cir. 1996) (rejecting quiet title action).

3. The square conflict that exists among the courts of appeals on the question presented in this case is a recurring one of substantial administrative importance. The issue recurs with sufficient frequency that the IRS has issued a Revenue Ruling to address it. See Rev. Rul. 05-49, 2005-30 I.R.B. 125, 2005 WL 1710988 (July 25, 2005) (stating that the IRS disagrees with WWSM Investors and will follow Dahn). Because of the conflict among the circuits, parties in the Ninth Circuit are presently permitted to challenge IRS levies through either a wrongful-levy action or a refund action, whereas similarly situated parties in the Fifth and Tenth Circuits are limited to wrongful-levy actions and a shorter limitations period. Review by this Court would be appropriate to ensure consistent application of the revenue laws throughout the country.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted.
